Christe his kingdome, to the ouerthrowe bitter destruction of blindnes; error, Popery, superstition, and of all the tyrrannie of Antichrist, hauing perswaded me to accomlyshe their great and earnest desire, and to translate into our vulgare tongue, this little and necessary treatise of Humminge, called Ec-clesiastes, wherein what paynes I haue taken, I had rather a great deale the learned in reading shold iudge, then that I would speake any one worde of my selfe. This only (as I trust) without offence of any, I maye truly saye, that it would haue bene a great deale easier for me, to haue medled rather with some one whole and continuall com-mentarie, then with this little treatise, which in my iudgement may not unitley be termed Christian Rhetorica; that is to say, an arte out of the whiche the true and faithfull Ministers of Christe, may learne playnely, and euerly, to breake and distribute the worde of God unto the people, and flocke commissed to their charge. Nowe it is next vnuuo-wen howe haue a thing, it is to translate a my arte written, either in the Latyn, or in glyshe and vulgare tonge, in the whiche we cta, exordium, enarratio, genus didascalicum, paræneticum. &c. not withstanding this great difficultie whiche might altogether seeme to haue bene sufficient to dissuade, hinder, and discourage mee, to haue taken this little harde, and profitable woorke in hande: yet the examples of other wyse & learned men (who before me haue brought into our tongue the artes of Grammer, Logike, Rhetoricke, Arithmeticke, Astronomie, Geographie, &c. did not a little encourage and holden mee hereunto: so that I thought if other graue, wyse, and learned men, before me, both Romaynes, Italianes, Germanes, Frenchemen, and Englishmen, haue thought good for the aduauncement of Philosophie, and humaine knowledge, to bring into their mother tongue those and other like artes firste written in the Greeke hand to interprete this little arte of Christian Rhetorick, especially seeing that the same doth so farre passe the arte of Rhetoricke, as þ holy woorde of God doth exceede the knowledge of all manner of humaine philosophie. For that arte doth teache thee, curiously to handle; & eloquently to speake of worldly thinges, and of mens matters: & that either in prayse; or dispayse, either in defending and prouing, or els in reproving; impugning, discomending, and disallowing, wherof we haue examples in Demosthenes, and Ctesiphon, among the Grecians: in Maſt. Cicero; and Mar. Antonius among the Romaines; and in diuers other Oratoriis; who flourished in their time. But this doth instructe and teache thee, the true deuotion of the scriptures; howe they haue bene diversly of diuers godlye wyrters divided: What the use and profitte thereof is: what tongues are necessary for thee to learne and understande the scriptures: what the use of them are. Howe thou must studie diligently and aboue all other wyrters the holy scriptures. Howe thou must, for thy better understanding, conserue them together, noleaving al together; either to thyne owne oþ pere the Methode or arte of preaching, shall tell, or nothing at all profite vs; unlesse the spirite of God bee sydney thereto, whiche is, as it were the true nature unto it, and without the which the arte it selfe is able to doe nothing: for this holy spirite of God, doth not onely make vs apte; and able to learne this arte, or Methode; but doth also teache vs that the true ende, and right use hereof, is not onely to preache learnedly, or verily or cunningly the woord of God unto others, but also, and that especially, unto our selues, that our audience, seing our wise & honest sayinges, to agree together, with our good and godly dedes, may by our example frame also their life, and conuersation according to our preaching out of the woord of God; so to gether with vs both in word and deede. Glorie God the father of our Lord, Jesus Christ, to whom bee prayse and glory, for ever and ever. Amen.

The devision of the Fol. i Holy Scriptures.

The holy Scriptures is not after one sorte but diversly of diuers writers deuided, which thinge ought not to seme straig, or buseemelye unto anye man, for sometimes euен of one and the selfe same thinges, there are manye differences according to the diuersity wherof, the diuersities of devision may be taken, and authours haue beene accustomed, to appoinite such kindes of devisions, which do seeme to serue best for theyz purpose. Wherefore seinge that the Scripture is diuersly deuided, I will recite in order the chiese and principall devisions of the same and wil also declare the use of chent, to the ende that the profite of this varietye and difference may appeare unto all men.

The most common devision of the Scripture is this, whereas it is deuided into the old and newe Testamente, which being loyned together, are in the Greeke tonge

B.

The Preacher, or

by a certaine figure called Antonomasia) named the Bible, which also is therefore sometimes called an Instrument, because that by it, as by an Instrument, or ready meane, the holy will and woord of God is broughte and declared vnto vs. Nowe the Epithetes, or names of old and newe, are taken from the cyrcumstances of tymes. For it is called the old Testament, because in respecte of the tyme it was the first. Againe it is called the newe, for that according to the time, it was the last. But if any man shoulde thincke this difference to be taken from the diuersite of couenauntes, it were no great matter: yet the first reason is truer and fitter for this place. Notwithstanding they whiche call the olde and the newe Testamente, by the name of booke, do vse the word Testament contrari to the common vse.

THE olde Testamente is called of the Jewes, [Efrim vcorba] and that of his number of Booke. For they doe receyue xxxiiii. Bookes of vndoubted auctoritey, which which they devide into fourte partes, or oþders. The first is called of theym Thora, that is to saye, the Lawe or doctrine, and it doth contayne ffe Bookes, to witte Genesis, Exodus, Leuiticus, Numeri and Deuteronomium, which the Gretians call also Νευτ&τευκον, that is to say, A volume containing ffe booke. The second parte is called of them Rhesconim Nebium, that is to saye, the former Prophetes, and this part hath fourte bookes, to witte, the booke of Iosua, the booke of Judges, the booke of Samuell and the booke of the kinges. The chirde parte is, Acharonim Nebijm, that is to saye, of the latter Prophetes, and it doth comprehendre fourte bookes, Eslaye, Jeremye, Ezechiel, and the booke of the twelue Prophetes, which they call the lesser, as are Dsee, Joell, Amos, Abdias, Jonas, Micheas, Nahum, Baruch, Sophonias, Waggenus, Zacharie, and Malachie. The fourthe parte is Chetubim, that is to saye, of the holye writers, and it doth containe eleuen bookes, Paralippominon, the Psalter, the Proverbes of Salomon, Job, Ruthe, Ecclesiastes, the Lamentacion of Jeremye, the Songe of Songes,

B 2 Hester,

Hester, Daniell, Eloraz, and Nehemias, which two latter, are taken for one booke. So that wee haue 24. bookes of the olde Testamente of undoubted auctority, deuided into 4. partes, or orders. Notwyrth-standing besides these bookes they haue certaine, also which they do call Apocrypha, that is to saye, secrete or hidden Scriptures, therfore so called, because they were not brought forth into the light, to confirme any opinion or doctrine. Of this sorte are Iesus the sonne of Syrach, Iudech, Tobias, the bookes of Machabees, the wisdome of Salomon, Baruch, þ scribe of Jeremie, and this is the denision of the olde Testament, after the maner of the Hebrewes and the Gretians.

The new Testamente is deuided into 4. partes. The first contayneth the foure Euangelistes. The second the actes of the Apostles. The third, the 21. Epistles of the Apostles, that is to saye, 14. of Paule, 3. of John, 2. of Peter, one of James, and one of Iudas. The fourth part contayneth the A-pocalyps of S. John. Moreover all the bookes of the newe Testament, are founde in the Cannon, excepte the seconde Epistle of S.

of S. Peter, the seconde and thirde Epistle of Iohn, and the Epistles of James, and Iude, with the Apocalypse. Some also do put the Epistle to the Hebrewes out of the Cannon.

Now somwhat seemeth to be added, concerning the vse and profite of this distinction rehearsed: for it little auayleth diligently to distinguishe, unlesse thou perceyue also what profite proceedeth thereof. First of all therefore the distinction profiteth much to iudge truly of the auctoritie of Holye bookes: for all the bookes of the olde and new Testament, are of an vndoubted saych, and are of great force to confirme opinions: except those which I sayde before were called Apocrypha, which truly may be reade wyth profite. But in dispucations of opinions they are not to be alleaged. For those bookes only are of an vndoubted auctority, which are truly attributed to Moses, to the Prophetes, to the Euangelistes, and to the Apostles. Wherefore since that the Primatiue and pure Church, hath doubted of the auctoz of the secrete Scriptures, called Apocrypha, they are of right reieced, when as they are alleaged by the aduersa-

rye against the wytinges of the Prophets and the Apostles. There is also another commodicie of this distinction, for it is commodious to haue a certain order of bookeſ, that Students may diſtribute the reading of the Bible into certayne times, as it ſhall ſeeme to be profitable for them, to leaue the holy bookeſ. The third commoditye is that a certaine waye or meaneſ maye be had (whether thou preach or interprete the ſacred Scriptureſ in the ſchooleſ) of recy-ting or alledging þe Testimonyeſ of Scriptureſ, that the place of the testimonye, may be shewed as it were wyth the finger, wheu as the aucthour of the wytinge, and the Chapter of the Booke is named and reheardeſ.

¶ The ſecond deuision.

The deuines in the ſchooleſ, do deuide the bookeſ both of the old and newe Teſta-ment, into Legall, Hiftoricall, Sapientiall, and Propheticall bookeſ. As of the olde Teſtamente, the fife bookeſ of Moſeſ are Legall: the bookeſ called Hiftoricall are Iouia, the booke of Judges, Ruth, the 4. bookeſ bookeſ of the Kingſ, Job, the two bookeſ of the Machabees. The Psalter, þ Pro-uerbeſ, Ecclesiastes, þ Song of Songeſ, the booke of Wisedome, Ecclesiasticus, are Sapiencial. And the xvii. Prophetes before reheardeſ are Prophetiſcall: In like manner also, to the ende theyr ignorance mighē the more euidently appare, they deuide the bookeſ of the newe Testamente, ſo that the bookeſ of the Euangelisteſ maye be Legall: the Acteſ of the Apolleſ Historeſcall: the xxi. Epiffeles of the Apolleſ Sapiencial: and the Apocaliſe of S. John to be Prophetiſcall. This by no colour maye bee excuſed: for it iſ altogether abſurde in as muſch as it iſ of them applyed to bookeſ.

But if they woulde applye this theyr ſub-tile deuision to the thingeſ (as I thincke) auncient wyptereſ haue done, it mighē peraduenture be boorne wytball: but because it iſ manifeſtlye falſe, as it iſ applyed to boo-keſ, I wiſh not in ſo euident a matter, make auye longer conſutacion. Furthermore the uſe of thiſ deuision as it iſ applyed to thingeſ, perhaſpeſ maye be heare in, that learneſ in readinge miaye wylſelye put

a difference betwene histories and lawes, the Prophetes, and the sayinges of wyse men, that is to say, Gnomas, wortly and approved Sentences.

The third deuision.

The whole Scripture, if thou consider things subiecte, are flicke deuided into History and Doctrine, which two the diligent reader will search oute studiously in reading of holy booke. Nowe therefore two kinds of Histories, the old and the newe; the old contayneth all Histories, euen from the beginning of the creation of the world, vntill the conception of our Lord, or the beginning of the Euangelicall historie. This Historie taketh his originall (as I haue saide) from the first condition of things, and so continuech vntill the Monarchie of Cyrus. The weekes of Daniel follow after, vntill Christe crucifyed. Moreouer I haue made a computacō of yeares for memorie sake, in these Verses which I will putte downe in Latine.

M.D.C.L.V.I. post Adam mundus inundat.
Post undas ad Abram, ducent nonaginta duoq;

Exodus

Exodus hunc sequitur, quingentos quinq; p Annos.
Exodus ad Babylon, nongent, decemq; recenset.
Post Babel ad Christū, D. & L. tribus, X. datur unus.

Englisched thus.

The world a thousand six hundreth fifty six yeares is found,
After Adam our father by Noes cloude drownd.
And from Noes cloude to Abram againe, Wee find two hundred yeares niney and twaine.
Exodus doth follow him, v. hundred yeres & que, Exodus to Babilon ix. hundreth and x. certayne.
And to our Sauour Christ from Babilon, Are five hundreth four score yeares and one.

If thou ioyne these yeares together, thou Shalce haue 3944. yeares from the first be-ginnig of thinges, vntil Christes his comminge, the which noimber I am woute to comprehende in these Verses.

Ter mille, & nōgent, quater, X. duo bis numeratur; Christus adest nobis, gloria vita salut.

In Englishe thus:

After three thousand nine hundreth 44. yeares, Christ our glory, life and health to vs appeares.
Furthermore the new history, is discribed of the

of the Euangelistes, which intreateth of the Conception, Nativitie, Circumcision, Offering, Banishment, Disputation, Bap-tisme, Fassinge, Temptation, Doctrine, Myracles, Death, Resurrection, and Ascention of Christe into Heauen. Also it in-createth of the geuinge of the holy Ghoste in the daye of Penticost, and of the Prima-clue Church, and his persecutions: for unto these Chapters and poinctes, the newe historie shalbe reduced. And thus much concerning the Hystoyme.

The doctrine is dispersed throughout al the booke of the olde and newe Testamēt, and is deuided into doctrine of thinges, and of signes. The doctrine of thinges is afterwards deuided into the Lawe and the Gospele. The doctrine of signes doth con-tayne the Ceremonyes and Sacramentes, whereof we haue heare no tyme to intreac at large, notwithstandinge the use of this distinction is not simple, and of one sorte.
For the holy hystoyme ought to be the glasse of a Christian lyfe. For it doth containe many examples of true godlynesse, of confession, of Fayth, of Patience, of calling &c.

It re-

It recycech the rewardes and punishmentes, both of obedience and disobedience towardes G D D, and comprehendeth manye testimonys and witnesses of G D D. The difference of doctrine verelye, dothe cause vs not to confounde rashlye wych the Papistes the Lawe and the Gospele, who dreame the Gospele to be the newe Lawe, but they are deceyued: For neyther the Prophetes, nor the Apostles, teache anye other thinge then Moses doth, althoughe in their manner of teachinge there is great difference. For Moses committeth to wrytinge the doctrine deliuered, as it were by hande from G D D, and the sachers: whiche doth contayne the perfecte worshippinge of G D D, but hee is more obscure and darke then the Prophetes.

The Prophetes are the interpretours of Moses, for that which Moses doth note, as it were wych certayne Aphorismes, that is to saye, briesly and summarilie, the Prophetes doe expounde in whole Sermons. But because that thing whiche the Prophetes did foletell, the Apostles sawe before their eyes, therefore are the Apostles made plainer interpreters of Moses, and of the Prophete,

Prophetes. Who so obseruech this difference, shall reade with greater profit, the wrytinges of Moses, of the Prophetes and of the Apostles. But in what estimation the scholers of the Apostles and other holy interpretours of the Scriptures are to bee had, I will declare hereafter, where I shal intreat of the maner of Interpretacion.

The fourth deuision.

There is yet another deuision deliuered or giuen vs by the Gretians; which wee maye not ouerpasse: For the wörde of God bringinge saluation unto man, is deuided into Protrepticō, that is to say, appertayning to exhortacion; Gnosticon, that is to saye, appertayning to knowledge; Practicon, þ is to saye, appertayninge unto that whiche they call practise. And unto that which is called Protrepticon, doe appertaine exhortacions, solacions, threateninges, chydings, which all are certaine prouocacions; or sterres þy whole to heare the word of God, to embrase and to obey it. Gnosticon, is a part of knowledge which doth contayne the worshippynge of God, þ knowledge of the Law, of the of the Gospell, and of the Sacraments, the Epicome and briefe summe whereof is Cathechisis, that is to say Instruction. The last appertayneth unto practise, for it is convenient that the obedience of the harte, and innocencie of life should follow knowledges. For sayth as S. Paule witnesseth, oughte to be unfayned, and effectual through loue. This devision serueth to this ende, that thou maist know the vse of the holy Scripturis, that is to say, that thou mayest obeye the exhorter, beleue the teacher, and doe according as thou beleuest. For he is worthy (sayth Agapetus) of God who doth nothing unworthy of God, but thinketh those thinges which are of God, and speaketh the thinges which he thincketh, & doth the thing which he speaketh.

of Narrations.

Nspeakinge of the formes of a Narration, I will declare fourte thinges in order. First with what helpes he ought to be instructed, that will become a profitable interpretour. Secondly which are the causes of Narrations, rsons. Thirdly what be the kindes of interpreting, and last of all what is the vse of commentaries, or expositions.

¶ The aydes or helpes of an interpretour.

What a profitable interpretour oughte to be instructed with liberal doctrine, and especially wylch the knowledge of Rhetorick and Logicke, there is no man which will doubt therof. Wherefore I will come to certayne other helpes by whiche heede is taken, that the interpretour go not astraye from Godlines. Therefore in intreating of holye misteryes, foure kindes of care especially do belong vnto him, who desirereth to be free from errore, and safe from the deceites of hereticks: Let the first care be to seeke God and his will in the Scriptures, wylch feare and humilitie, that bee may knowe him truly in oure Lord Iesus Christ: Let the second care be to haue the sacred worde of God for a rule. This care boyned wylch the former shall cause thee to be conuersaunt in the Scriptures without arrogancy or contencion, and that thou bee not not puffed uppe wþch foolishe rashnes, but rather craue his helpe wþch humilitþ, whþ in the Scrþptures thou seekest faychfullþ: þ seconde care causeth thee also, that thou be not carefull of those thinges which are not founde written in the woord of the Lorðe. Fox thou oughtest to be content wþch that lighte, which the Lorð bath shewed thee to be followed. Let the third care be diligent. Iye to conferte the Scrþptures, to thende that the consente of Moses, of the Prophe- res, of Christ, and of the Apostles, maye e- uidentlye appeare, and that suche sentences as seeme to disagree, throughe conference maye be reconcyled, the cþcumstaunces of the places beinge dilligentlye obserued. This care causeth thee not rashlye to take houlde of anye one sentence of the Scrþptu- res to assaulte or repugne another therewþch, from whence no doubt all the sectes of heresye haue spronge uppe, which thing that it maye the moxe evidentlye appeare, wee shall openlye declare by examples. Arrius doothe heare the Sonne sayinge; The Father is greater thenne I. This Sentence hee snatcheth, and there- wþch

wyfth, is girded, and armed to vanquish and ouercome the deuinicie of Christe: Cōtrariwysle, Manichæus to the ende hee mighte take away þ humanity of Christ, snatches the sayinge of S. Paule in his first Epistle to the Corinthians, the 15. Chapter, where Christ is called the second Adam from heauen beauenlye. Againe there are some which acknowledge the deuinicie, and con-fesse the humanity, but they make two persons in Christe, the worde, and the sonne of the Virgin. Osiander, because it is wri-ten þ Lord is our rigteousnes: doth ascribe sūffication to the deuine nature alone, as thoughe the humanity were of no force at all, to the benefice of saluation. Stancharus on the contrary syde (because the worde of promise, is of the seede of a woman, and Paule calleth Jesus Christe, beinge man a mediatour) wythdraweth the benefite of redemption from the deuinicie, and doth attribute the same to the onelyc humancye.
Here if there had beene þ feare of our Lord, and true humilitie, and if the desire of con-tentio[n] and pride had bene absence, they migt easly haue iudged of these misteries, þy conference of the Scriptures. Let the firſt

first care b^e to referre euery interpretation to the proportion of fayth, from the which if the interpretation doe disagree, it shalbe accoumpted false. But contrarywise, if it do agree with it althoughe sometimes it erreth from the marke, and minde of the auc-thore, yet oughte ye to knowe, that this is done without the daunger of saluation. But what is it to call an interpretation to the proportion of fayth : it is so to ordaine it, þ it maye be correspondente to the first principles of fayth, and that it maye seeme to be as it were builded vpon them. For those thinges are sayde to be done accordinge to the proportion which are made by comparison to another thinge, or els when other thinges are framed by the comparison of others. Wherevpon when Paule doth commaunde that Prophete, that is to say, the interpretation of the Scriptures, ought to be proportionable to fayth, hee wylleth that the interpretour shoulde haue respecte to the firsts principles of Religion, which are plaine and manifest, as conserninge the lawe and the promises of the Gospell, with the which euery interpretation oughte to agree . Wherefore the Papistes in the expositi-

position of this saying: (If thou wylt enter into life keepe the commaundementes) Do departe from the proportion of Fayth, when they do conclude of this sayinge, That men may obtaine saluation by their owne proper wokes, for this interpretation doth stresse with cleare and manifest principles: As are these, The seede of the woman shall breaue the Serpentes heade, also, The Lambe of God, that taketh away the sinnes of the woylde: and againe, If righteousnes be of the law Chritte dyed in vaine.

And alwayes after this maner the mind of the interpretour ought to be bent, to the firste principles of our Religion, from the which hee shall not suffer hymselfe to be drawne awaye by any Sophisticall reason: For bee that contemneth this proportion of Fayth, commended of S. Paule to the interpretour, and els where doth seeke an interpretation contrary to the rule of faich, let him be assured that hee shalbe plagued of G D D. For like as in tynes paste vnder the olde Testamente, fyer oughte alwayes to be taken from the fier of the Aulter, wherewith their Sacrifice shoulde be burned: so euery interpretation of þ Scripres, tures, should depend vpon the euerlasting word of God. And euен as Nadab and Abihu, for putting straunge fier in theyr Censors, which they were commaunded to doe, were punished of the Lorde: so heretickes bringing in the devision of reason, and the deceites of Philosophie, in steerde of true religion, are to be iudged woxthye of punishment. And thus muche concerninge the helpe of an interpretour: nowe will I declare that which in þ second place was propounded.

In þ preface of Philip Melanchthons places, foure causes of interpretation are rehearsed, whereof this is the first, þ the kind of speache may be vnderstode: for hearers or readers do not in euery place understand the phrasess of a straunge tongue, yea sometimes men of singuler learning take greate paines in this chinge: for oftentimes it happeneth that a sentence being expounded with the word of a straung tongue, which though they aunswering truly in signification, yet notwithstanding they keepe not the same sence in both tongues, and that for the difference of the phrase, or manner of speache . Therefore leaste here unwares wee may be deceyued, oftentimes a learned interpretour is needful. The second cause, is the iudgement of þ order of thinges: For he þ perceyueth not the maner of the handling, shal certainly very oftē times be deceiued: as they are which recyte out of Paule, this saying against þ Justification of faith: Not the hearers of the Law but the doers shalbe iustifyed. Here if they had considered the maner of the handling they might haue seene Paule in that place, not to haue preached of the iustification of works, þ is to say, þ men shoulde be counted iustifyed throughe woorkes before God, when as Paule there laboureth to confute this opinion against þ doctrine of fayth. Therefore an interpretour is needful, whiche may shew cunninglye an order, and the partes thereof: the profit of which thing is greater then that it can be declared in few wordes. The third cause ought to be the witnes of a true interpretation, for when the hearers perceine the interpretations to be brought frō the word of God, & do see the agreement of the word of God , and of the pure Church with þ interpretation:

pretation: they loue the doctrine more eas-sely, and do leare it more greedely. The fourth cause, is the confutation of false opinions, least learners should be infected with the poysons of heretickes These causes are sufficiently greate enough for þ which God wyll haue the mynisterye of his woord both in scholes, and in Churches to be preserued.

¶ The kinds of interpreting.

Although by those things, which I haue sayd alreadye, concerning the causes of interpretations, the kindes of interpreting may after a sorte be vnderstode, yet because it is needefull to haue them seperated, I wil increate of them as plasmly as I can, accordinge as before I haue promised: wherefore I haue noted foure kindes of expounding holy thinges in reading the commentaries of diuers authours.

¶ The Grammarien his kind of interpreting.

S Ome nothinge carefull of the Methode of a treatise, do onely expounde the wor-

C 3 des and

des and þ phrasēs after a familiar & plaine manner, whiche kinde of interpretation, because it consisteth of a certayne exposition of Grammer, it shalbe called Grammaticall: This kinde did Athanasius, Theophilaete, Ambrose, and many others followe: trulpe this is prayse worthe, that suche excellente men which were able both abundantly, & eloquently to make long disputationes, and orationes of every matter: that notwithstanding hatching submitted themselves, to þ Grāmariās. For they knew wel that frō thence a true sentence shoulde be taken. Furthermore this kinde of an interpretour, oughte to be instructed with liberall learning. For first he ought to haue the knowledge of that tongue, whiche þ authore of the Wyting wroth: vntesse he desire to see rather wytch other mens eynes thē w̄ his owne. Althoughe a perfect knowledge is not here required, yet there ought to be so much skill þ hee be able to cōferre cogether these thre tōgues, the Hebrewe, Greeke and Latin. For a deuine interpretour hath neede of these thre tongues, the conference whereof, he that is studious shall perceyue to yeld more profit, then the tedious commētaries of great me.

Agayn,

Againe to thende hee maye interprete that thing aptly, which he vnderstandeth truly, Logicke is necessary, which oftentimes to a Grammaticau interpretour, doth put to her willing hand. He shal also be not a litle holpen with the commentaries of variety, frō whence he may learne diuers formes of varyng one and the selfe same sentence.

¶ The Logician his kinde of interpreting.

Others when they see, that order obtayneth the chiefeſt partes in all things, they ſeeke oute and declare the Methode & order of a treatife, & do put forth queſtiōs, arguments, collations, and do brieſely re-duce the argumēts to certaine chapters, or common places, as thoughē they were conſultations. This is a moſt eſpeciall care to this kinde of interpretour, þ all things may be expounded openly, and declared diſtinct-lye. But because this kinde is moſt profitablc in the ſchooles, I wil brieſely ſhewe the way, which þ interpretour in this kind may ſafely follow, whiche thing þ it may be done more plainly, I wil cōprehend al the whole matter in fourē Canons, or general rules.

¶ The first Cannon.

In the beginning of þ reading of any hōly Scripture, he ought first of all things to speake of the kinde of doctrine, and þ(as it seemeth to mee) maye fikelie be done after this maner. First, he oughte to expounde what kind of doctrine it is, from whence he may fall into the cōmendation therof. Secondly, he shold shew auccorſy. Thirdly, he shold ſignifye of what certainty it is, & frō whence it ſhould be taken. Fourthly, what is the neceſſity. Fifthly, he ſhoulde declare what profite and cōmodity ſhould proceede from thence to the hearers. These fiue pointes in the beginning of any hōlye booke (in my iudgemente) are verye profitable to be handled. Neither do I diſallowe it, if either bee adde ſome thinges to theſe, or take other ſome awaye, ſo that he deceiue not the hearers, who when they learne, doe alſo greedelye ſeeke for the Methode of immi-tation.

¶ The ſecond Cannon.

W heras according to this firſt Cannon, we haue generally ſpoken of the kinde of doctrine, wee may profitable diſcende to

Hy-

Hypothesis, that is to say, to the particular wrytinge, which is layed before vs to be expounded, in which place, these thinges are needefull to bee spoken off, by him which followeth the Logicians kinde of interpreting. First, who and what maner of man, the auctorour of the wrytinge is, and from whence the auctoritee of the wrytinge doth depende. Secondly, what was his occasion of wryting, the obseruation wherof helpeth to vnderstande the order of the treatise. Thirdly, what is the state of the matter or principall question, whether one or many from whence Judgement may be giuen of the kinde of the cause, and the endeavour of the whole wryting, that is to say, the ende and verge laste scope, maye be perceived and knowne. Fourthly what is the Methode of this present wryting, or (which is all one) what is the order of the treatise, whiche excepte it bee obserued, the laboure of the teacher shalbe little or nothinge profitable.

¶ The thirde Cannon.

WE must diligently obserue this, in al þ wrytings of the Prophets and þ Apostles,

ales, that whilst they teach, they oftentimes fall into admonitions, reprehensions, prayses, threatenings, comforts, &c. wherewith they applye their doctrine to the hearers, & do pricke them forwardes, to receiue their doctrine. They that consider not this, can neither obserue the order of þ treatise themselves, nor yet shewe the way well to any others. But I will speake more of this Canon hereafter, wheras I shal intreat of the large and ample treatise of common places.

¶ The fourth Canon.

A N expositio of every chapter may bery fity be made after this maner, in þ first place the whole chapter muste be gathered into a certaine briefe collection or summe, which none may cōueniently do, byles he be skilful in Logicke. For those things which are spoken specially & by partes, he shall reduce to generalities & to the whole, and euc of those thinges which are accessaries & of lesse value, neither shal he adde to al maner arguments of chings, but shalbe contēt only with a sume of things: and all other maters which are added for amplification , or deduction of chinges must be remoued.

In the second place hee shall declare the order of the chapter, in shewing how it agreeth with that which wente before, (if anye thinge wente before) and shall declare the chiese partes, and giue admonicō how they follow. In the thirde place the exposition of the texte shall ensue, the common places shalbe noted, that all thinges may be conuented to profite. But the waye of the inuen-tion of places, shalbe caughte hereafter, where wee shall increase of the places that beonge to a preacher: at this time it suffiseth briefly to haue shewed what is neede-full to be done.

¶ The oratour his kind of interpreting.

There is also a kind of interpretation pertayning to Oratours, most profitable in Churches & scholes, wherein the greatest wits haue exercised themselues: as Basile, Gregory Naziāzene, Chrisostome, Augustine, & many other Greekes & Latins, for these do expouē euery question more at larg after the maner of Rhethoritans, of which thinge wee muste speake againe when wee come to the treatise of common places.

The

¶ The mixt kinde of interpreting.

The mixt kinde of interpreting is, wher þ interpretour eicher mingleþ all thin-ges aboue rehearsed, or els toyndeth certaine of them together, whiche thing not a few in our time, are wont to do with great profite, In whose nomber Philip Melanthon, wout doubt is the chiefe, whom manye wochier men as Bucer, Caluine, Brentius, Be-za, & diuers others, do immitate & follow.

¶ The vse of Commentaries.

Many do abuse Commentaries, whilste they labour continually in them, little or nothing esteeming the teſt of the Bible, who do like unto him that traualing some whither, determineth to abide alwayes in his tourneye. For Commentaries are like to the Image of Mercurie. For like as they are ſet vp of purpose to ſhew the right way to trauelers, leaſt they ſhould goe out of the waye, ſo commentaries do leade, as it were vp the hande, the vnerercized reader: which he ſhoulde not alwayes vſe, but ſo as þ trauaylour doth vſe the Images of Mercurie.
For the trauaylour lokeþ not vpon them,

when by often times goinge that waye, bee knoweth the waye perfectly. Here first of all þ interpretour is admonished of his dutie, that is to say, that he thincke he oughte to shew a waye, and that a most ready waye to the hearers, and not to hinder suche as make hast to go forward. Moreouer even heare it is euident in what estimation the disciples of the Apostles, and their successors being interpretours of the Scripturres are to be had. For all these are to be followed in so much as they haue the scriptures of the Prophetes and of the Apostles going before them, but if sometimes they do erre from this, let vs acknowledge our common facility and readines in falling, & pray to God earnestly, that he suffer vs not to fal into daungerous errors.

¶ The waye to frame or make holy Sermons.

The Methode or making of Sermons, is a sure way and meanes shewing a reaso of making sacred Sermons. And because those thinges which are needfull to be declared in the Church, are not of one kinde, nor can be handled after one sorte : It were verye

verye profitable first to shewe the kindes of Sermons, afterwards the meanes whereby euery thinge maye be increased of wþt profit, to thend there maye be a certaine pþscript & compendious way of making Sermons. For such as shalbe ministers of the most holpe ministry of the worde (then the whiche nothing can be moze holy) which beinge confirmed wþt vse and exercise, they may encrease wþt preceptes of Logicke, & Rhetorick. I do not forge new preceptes, but do applie the common rules of Logitians and Rhetoritians, to a certaine matter, and doe ioyne together wþt preceptes the practise of learned men, wh þ I haue heard preache, that the imitation mighte be the moze easye, which truly would be but very weake: unlesse it were holpen wþt preceptes, as I haue said before in the preface.

B Efore I come to the kinds of Sermons I will brefely touche the partes, whiche may very well be counted fourre in nomber, the Exordium or beginninge, the Treatise, the Digression and the Conclusion . The Exord-

Eprogium in this place, is the beginning of the sermon, after iuuocation and prayer is made, and the holye lesson, or text read and recited, which wee purpose to handle and to intreate of. This may very aptly somtimes be taken vppon the occasion, or oportunitie, somtimes from other cyrcumstaunces. And it shoule be so handled that it might be, as it were a certaine way, to that thing which we minde to intreate of. It must be modest, briefe and graue to chende it maye obtaine the good will of the hearers, maye syzre them vpp by easines of teaching, and maye keepe theym attentiu. The treatise or manner of handlinge, doth alter throught diversity of the ames, wherby it happeneth that sometimes it is contente with a devisiōn, and an exposition; and that when it is a simple cheame. Diuision is a sentence by the which we briesely declare what things wee will speake of, this is commended for the breuitye, the perfectnes and fewnes of words, for the which aske counsaile & helpe of the precepts of Qnatours. Exposition is a sentence, wherin the parts of a diuision are declared, and it is three fould. Synthetical, Dicretical, and Analytical, of which hereafter.

after wee shall increate more at large.
This exposition is sometimes simple, when as no argumences are added: sometimes mixte, when the reasons of the partes of an exposition are intermingled: sometimes wyth devision. Ye may seeke out the confirmation of the partes of devision, and the cōfutation of the opinions of others stryuing with ours, and that so often as the theame is compounded. The Wysedome of the preacher shal easlye iudge, when the conſu-ration shold go before the confirmation, & when it shold follow: it must go before of necessite when the mindes of the hearers are beforehande possessed and holden wyth errour: for they cannot receiue the truch before they are deliuered from the errour and falsehode. Digression is a ſentēce, wher by the doctrine is applyed to þ hearers, by cōforting, chiding, fearing & admoniſhing: In this þ beginning, the end, & the place are ſpecially to be cōſidered: the beginning is þ it may ſeeme of his owne accord to flow out of þ doctrine. The end þ it may go together and agree with the doctrine following, if a-nye doctrine be expounded: The place þ it maye be put to thende of euery member of a de-

a division or partition, lest the judgement of learners, should be troubled with interruption of doctrine, more shalbe spoken of digression hereafter. Pardonation, is the conclusion of the treatise. This doth both bries-ly rehearse the summe of the thinges which are handled, and doth also sterte vp the min-des of the hearers with the commendation of the doctrine expounded, and by shewyng the vse thereof. Now let vs come to speake of the kindes of a sermon: There are generally two kyndes of preachinges, the one appertayneth to teaching: the other to exhortation: That whiche appertayneth to teaching, is of simple places, and those as well of persones as of thinges, and of places compounded, of generall sentences, and particular argumentes. The other whiche appertayneth to exhortation, is diuided into three partes, for either it persuadeth, or re-buketh, or comforteth. This difference or di-finition of sermons may be proued. First of the diuersitie of hearers, to whome the sermon shalbe applied. For either they are altogether rude, and must bee taughte, to whome the first kinde dothe appertayne, or els they are not rude, but rather feble and

D faine

faint harted, and must be lifted vp with consolacions: oþers slowe, and they must bee pricked forwarde; oþers contemning, and are to be chastened with threateninges. To these fourre kindes of hearteres at the sermons of Christ are to be dereced, for sometyme hee teacheth the ignorant whiche are desirous to learne, and sometime it confoorth, and styrreth vp the faint harted; nowe hee exhorteth the slouer sorte, and nowe with threateninges, he terrifieth such as are profane, and vngodly. Hereof we may everywher easelpe finde examples in the historie of the Gospell. Agayne, the same is proved by the vse and custome of the holy Scripture: For Paule wryteth thus in his seconde epistle to Timothe, and the thirde chapter. All scripture geuen by inspiration of God, is profitable to improue, to amende, and to instructe in righteousnes that the name of God may be perfecte and prepared vnto all good workes. Here the fourre folde vse of the scripture is declared, and that with fourre wordes whiche are in the Greeke tongus named Didascalia, Elenchos, Epanorthosis, and Paidia. Didascalia, is to be handled in the first kinde, that is to say, in that whiche apperappertaineth to teaching. Elenchos, hath chiding. Epanorthosis, is when the fal is lifted vp, and made stedfast, whiche manifestly appeareth to bee done with consolations and comfortes. Paidia, is the teaching of children, whose chieffest office is, to perswade to goodness, and honestie, and to dissuade from wicked and filthe thynges. Our distinction therefore agreeeth with the varietie of the hearers, with the example of Christe, and with the tradition of Paule. But because the hearers are mixed in publicke assemblies it cometh to passe, that the prophetes, Christ, th' apostles, & all the godly ministers of the worde doe oftentimes bulde & frame out of doctrine, consolations, persuasions, and chidings, all which the force of doctrine bache as it were ioyned with it: euen as I haue sayde before, is done in the wrytinges of the Prophetes and Apostles: whose examples it becommeth godlye ministers to folowe in makynge of Sermones. Neþher is our distinction to bee disallowed whiche doth appercayne to the nature of teachyng of thynges, and doth shewe what order and wape is to be obserued in makynge of Sermones, although sometymes those thynges

D 2 which

whiche I haue named as accessaries; and impertinent, are applied by the figure of dis-gression, which thing who so ever doth not obserue, can neyther make their owne sermons well, neyther ludge of other mens, nor yet beare them awaie in mynde. Wherefore the kyndes of sermons must first be distinguished, and then those thinges whiche are added, maye verye well bee soymed and framed.

¶ The kynde of teaching.

That part of sermon which appertaineth to teaching, is that whose ende is, to tea-che the ignoraunte hearers. In this kynde of sermon the godly preacher shall imploye his whole strengthe first that he himselfe do perfectly understande the thing that is to be taught: Next that hee frame with him selfe a full and perfecte order of the same in wryting. Thirdly, that hee expounde the same in a plaine and common speache, not having any respecte to his owne commendation for his eloquence, but rather to ad-uaunce the glory of God, and helpe the ca-pacite of the present hearers, whiche if hee doe, he may hope that the hearer shall not waue r wauet in opinions any more, but consent to the true and cleare doctrine. And because there are two kyndes as before in diuision I haue declared, that sermon which apper-taineth vnto teaching, to wyte, Simple or of simple places: and compounde or of com-pounde places: The order of teaching requireth that in the first place, wee speake of the simple manner of teaching, but because in the simple kind of teaching, sometimes the persons, sometimes the thinges are increated of, it seemeth best first to speake of the creatise of persons.

¶ Of the simple kinde of teaching which belongeth vnto persones.

There are twoo kyndes of the creatise of persones, the one belongeth to examples the other vnto demonstration. For if anye deede of the persone is layde before vs, it is an example: but if the whole persone be di-scribed it is επιδειξις, that is to say, demonstration of the persone.

Of that treatise of persons whiche belong to examples.

When any persone therfore is set before vs out of the holy histories, whose whole life is not described, but some deede of þ persone is brought forth, & that for the cause either of the doctrine, or of þ immitatiō, or els of the admonition, it shalbe a treatise Paradigmatical, þ is to say, belonging vnto exāples. After this maner Paule doth set forth Abraham to the Romaines, & to the Galathians, after this manner the epistle to the Hebrewes, chap. xi. recitetha great scroule, & number of prophēts & of kings. By Abraham his deede, the doctrine & nature of faische is taught, the imitation commended, þ exercisēs of vocation, & the fruices and workes of true godlines are cōfirmed. The repētaūce of Manasses doth teache vs þ such as do fal, are received againe, & therfore is profitably set before vs for immitatiōs sake: it putteth vs in minde of þ mercy of God, which of his mere goodness, receiueth into fauour so cruell a persecutour of his churche, & so vile an Idolater. But here we must speake against those men, who oftentimes do abuse the exāples of saintes. For there ar some who had rather immitate þ wicked deedes of saintes then their vertues: & do defend thē selues w the exāples of saintes. There are some also whiche

which out of cye personal deedes of saintes and extra ordinary commandementz, do silf uoxedly frame a forme of an act, & do coined the same as a generall lawe: they are hit worthy of any answer. These ar to be called againe into the right way by an admonition.
For it behoueth vs to kepe a difference be-twene þ common & personal commandementz, or preceptz of godlines, which only do touch one people, or one man. The Hebrewes were comaunded to robbe the Egypciās. Abrahā by Gods comaundement makeþ him selfe ready to slaye his sonne, for a sacrifice in the mōnt Moria. These persoual actes are not to be applied particularlly, but onely generally: For out of both these exāples we must learne obedience unto God in those thinges which he requireth of vs in his worde. Also in this treatise of the exāples of persons, it is manifest, þ the papistes, & especially þ mōkes haue daūgerously erred: who i their sermons haue laide before vs I know not what countersait peticie saintes, & haue fained them to haue liued al their life long so blamēles, þ they never offendēd, no net in the least thing.
Such a fained descriptiō of persōs, makeþ rather to desperatiō thē to þ edifieng of þ cō-science, wrastling w the greatness of sinne, & of the wrath of God.

Ther-

Therefore let vs take unto vs true examples, and let vs leue fayned examples for the Poetes, whiche are not to be handled of the whiche are called by saint Paule the Ste-wardes of the misteries of God. The sacred scripture and the true historie doth minister examples sufficiently: as of Abraham, Job, of Joseph, of Manasses, of Mary Magdalene, of the cheefe which was couerted, & of such like: for out of such as these ar, we may not onely teache the bearers true godlines, but also y forme of living according to their kynde of calling. Therefore the godly preacher must remember to shewe for the examples profitable unto godlines, and not those whiche seeme to cause desperation. Nowe it is time that we declare those thinges wher-of we haue spoken with a playne example: And because none can be moxe famouse then the example of Abraham, I wil lay that before you to be examined. Paule sayth, Abraham beleued God, and it was imputed to him for righteousnes. In this place Paule bringeth forth the example of Abraham, especially for doctrices sake, and from thence draweth forth not only the firme and sure doctrine of righteousnes, but also y nature

of faith: and ic d thence doth shewe of what holines of life the beleuing man oughte to be. After this manner let vs learne , by the imitation of Paule to obserue two thinges in examples to witte, the facte in it selfe, and then the circumstancies of the persone , and of the facte . The facte in it selfe doth teache that true righceousnes doth consist of faith, in the promises of God. The circumstancies of the persone , and of the facte , doe put vs in minde of many thinges. First that Circumcision of necessitie is not required to iustification : For Abraham was iustified before Circumcision, but afterwards circumcision was added, as a seale of righceousnes whiche is of faith. Secondly, the profession of Abraham,his life before iustification, witnesseth þ he was receaved of God,not for his owne proper merites, or woxkes going before, but by the onely goodnes of God. Thirdly,in this example of Abraham is declared that iustification of faith, pertaineth equally to all . For Abrahams was iustified before men were discerned by any outward woxkes. Out of this circumstance the Prophets without doubt haue drawn and frammed their sermons , of the callinge of the Gentles.

Gentiles. Fourthly, that the ceremonies of Moyses are not required of them that are to be iustified: for euen as Abraham was iustified without them, so they that shalbe iustified after his example, must not require them to the accomplishment of their iustification. Fifthly, that rightheousnes doth come without the morall lawe, and the workes committained in the decaloge or two tables, for if we be iustified according to Abraham his example, & he was iustified many yeares that is to say, 430. yeares before the lawe: truly it can not bee that rightheousnes is of the lawe. But if any man should obiecte that the morall lawe was from the beginning, & that Abraham did not wante it, the answer is easye: for no rewarde is due to workes without the couenant of God. For workes are not meritorious of their owne wortyness, but by the acceptation of God and by reason of the couenant: Therefore the conclusion of Paule abideth firme and stedfast: Abraham is iustified by the fayth of promise before the couenant of workes was published: to wyte, the man that dothe them shall live in them. Wherefore he is iustified by fayth & not by workes. Sixthly, that the true true and iustifieng fayth, is a certayne full assuraunce, whiche is not subdued by argumentes of reason, but stedfastly beleueth that he whiche promyseth cannot lie, how soever the whole nature of thynges may seeme to grayne saye it. And that fayth hath good woxkes, and obedience towarde God ioyned wth it, and that nothing ought to bee esteemed deater to a Christian man, then to be obedient to the will of God. And so the Prophete, godly kynges, Apostles, and in like manner all godly men after Abraham, first by example haue learned the true waye of iustification, and afterwardes by the circumstaunces of the persone, and the facte, haue bene admonished of mosse weyghtye things. By this meanes the godly preacher by the example of Paule, may applye other examples, both in them selues and also in the varietie of circumstaunces, and allways in his application, he must remeber to haue a regarde to the proportion of fayth.

sones whiche belongeth to demonstration.

The

That kynde of treatise of persons whiche belongeth vnto demonstratio doth handle the whole life, and also euery parte of þ life of any persone , and that in the same order, as the places of persones are rehearsed in the questions of Philtip Melanccon. For that order is not only naturall but also pro-fieable to the speaker and to the hearer. But first of al this is to be obserued in this kinde of treatise of persones, that those members especially are to bee adourned , and beautefied, from whome these thre aboue rebear-sed, doctrine, imitation, & admonition may be taken . For Paule in the. xv. chapter to the Romaines , doth admonishe vs of this of application, when he sayth : what soever thinges are written, are written for our learning. &c. Therefore suche members ought to be applied to the whole body of þ church whiche thing is done when wee transferre aright the particular to the generall sentences: as if the life of John Baptiste, were to be handled after the manner of demonstration: to obserue the naturall order, wee should increate of his parentes , of his conception, of his nativitie, of his education, of his vocation, of his office , of the testimonie

of Christe, of his death and of those thinges that happened both about & after his death.
In the member of his parētes, these things are contained, that the continual prayers of all godly are heard at the length, that the afflicted whiche beleue do obtayne comforte at the lasse, and that God dothe allowe the marrage of priestes. In the member of his conception first the office of Angels is to be considered, that they are the Embassa-dours of God, & the ministers of þ churche.
Secondly, that God is myndefull of his promises. Thirdly, that the power of works of God is not hindred by naturall impediment, that is to saye, through barrennesse & wante of nature. Last of all, because Iohn as yet in his mothers wombe did acknowlegedge Christe, it teacheth vs, that children are receyued of God, and that God wyll be acknowledged & honoured of children. In the member of his nativitie, thankfulness towardes God, for his benefites received is commended, the mutuall fracie of the godly is shewed, that they ought to rejoyce with them, on whom God poureth his blessing: & to conclude, that the godly ought to bringe and offer their children unto God. Againe his his straigthenes of life doth commende vns, not a monkishe or solitary lyfe, but sobrietie and obedience vnto God. After all these things in his office, & in the circumstances of his persone, and office, not onely his doctrine, but also his consolation, his constacie in his office, his confession, his crosse, and loue of the truth, wch other innumerable vertues are set forth vnto the godly. His co-solace or consolation, is in that he did shewe, ex-point out w his finger our sauour Christ his constancie in that contynning the threacynges of Herode and of the Pharissets: bee-caught the Gospele without any feare: his confession, in that he confessed hym self to be the boyce of a crier in the wyldernes: His crosse, in that according to his vocation, hee did not onely wander abroade without any certayne mansion place: but also doubted not to suffer peache. All these thinges which are so drawen forth of the circumstaunces of the persone and of his office, are first layd before godly ministres of the word, for the cause of doctrine, of immitation, and of admonitiō, and afterwardes generally to the whole vniuersall churche, so farre forth as it belongeth to the common dutyes of god-lines.

Simple teaching, and also of other Logiciās diligently declared: yet I thinke it profitable in this place, to prescribe a waye of increasing, whiche shalbe commodious to newe beginning preachers. First therefore I will set downe the chiese chapters, and next declare the Methode of the of the crea-tise. The chapters or chiese pointes ar these,

- 1 Definition.
- 2 Division or partition.
- 3 Causes.
- 4 Effectes.
- 5 The vse and the abuse.
- 6 Contrarieties.

¶ Of definition.

Of definition some are ours, and some ar our aduersaries. Those which ar ours, we must expounde as true, we must proue, conferme, and gather together: The others we must confute as false. In bothe kindes there is a peculier Methode, but first we wil speake of the former. The definitiō therfore wich the godlye preacher shall declare as true and immovable, must haue foure parts In the treatise, Exposition, Reason, Confirmation,

mation & conclusion. Exposition is a sentence whereby we expounde our own definition of any thing with manifest & playne wordes. And there is two kindes of definitiōs, pertaining to a deuine, the one short & brieſe, þ other copiouse & large, that is content with the kinde & with the difference. This doth applie to the kinde, & to the difference, causes, things adioyning, or annexed proprieties, & sometimes circumstaunces.

The reason is the prooſe of the definition. Confirmatio, is that whereby we confirme & declare the reason, either by examples, or by any other manner of declaration.

Conclusion is a brieſe comprehension of þ exposition of the reason, & of the confirmation. Furthermore, I would haue þ whiche is spoken of the reason, & of the confirmatio to be so vnderſtanded, not that a ſimple reaſon, or a ſimple confirmation onely, but that also both many reasons, & cōfirmatiōs, may bee added, as ſhall ſeeme proffitable to the hearers, & to the thing þ is to be intreated of. Furthermore, this is to be obſerved, that a large definition which is to be cōfirmed, & proued, muſt firſt bee reſolved into propositions, ſometimes alſo into boſides or termes, then

then afterwardes by litle & litle, þ partes must be toynd together by cōposition, & the necessitie of the definition must be shewed: & all these are to be added to the maner & way of definitiō. Now by one or two exāples, let vs make our preceptes manifest, & let vs take Matrimonie in hande, soz to be first of all defined. Matrimonie is a lawful cōiunction of a man & womā (this is the exposiciō of the definitiō þ reason followeth) soz it is wittē, wherfore let þ man forsake father & mother and cleave unto his wiffe (the cōfirmation fo-loweth) if these wordes were truly examined, we should finde in them, þ whiche we did put in the definition. For first they tellisſe that there ought to be a coniunctiō which is lawful, when it is done according to þ word and will of God. Furthermore where as he saith: they shalbe two in one flesh, he would hane the copulatiō of one man & one womā, not of one husband & many wiues, neither of one wife & many husbandes, euuen as the first wedlocke of Adam a. d. Eue doth witnes & declare unto vs. (Complexion folow-eth.) Therfore since God hath cōmisdēd by his own law þ two persōs should be lawfully coupled together, & þ there should bee no mo persons in matrimoniē thē two. It folo-

E 2. wethe

Weth that Matrimonie is a lawfull cōiunction of man & wife: By this exāple the trae-tise of a simple definition may after a sort be understanded, whiche if thou wilt applie to the lawes & rules of Logicke, the first parte is called the question: the second, the reason, the thirde the confirmation of the reason, or the shewyng of the cause of the reason: the fourth is the conclusion, wherin by a particular forme the reason is repeated with the question. Notwithſtāding the names of the members whiche I haue aboue rehearsed, do serue rather the popular & vulgar treatise, & are more easy to be vnderſtanded Let vs also adde an other example, of a large definition, which we wil declare more at large.
And let vs take the Gospell to bee defined.
The Gospell is a doctrine revealed from God, wherin deliueraunce frō ſinne, & from the curse of the lawe, & the wrath of God is preached & remiſſion of ſinnes, ſaluation, & life euerlaſting is proclaimed, to al beleuers in the ſonne of God for his ſacrifice, that the goodnes and mercie of God towardes men might be preached, and that being deliuered by þ ſonne, they might declare forth fruities wōrthy of the Gospell. Thus farre goeth

the exposition of the definition, whiche is to be resolved by resolution into these propositions, whereof the first is þ the Gosspell is a doctrine revealed frō God. The second, that the Gosspell doth declare deluerance from sinne, frō the curse of the lawe & the wrath of God. &c. The third, that it proclaimeth remissio of sinnes, saluation, & life euerlasting. The fourth, that those benefites happen to them that beleue in Christ. The fift that the force of the Gosspell doth rest in the sacrifice of Christ. The sixt, that out of the Gosspell God is to be preached. The seventh, that man oughte to shewe his thankefulnes to God, in godly living. These propositions must be in order confirmed. The reason therfore of the first proposition doth follow, that the Gosspell is a doctrine revealed frō God. Paule doth teache manifestly calling the Gosspell a secret misterie, frō the beginning of the worlde. (The confirmation) by whiche wordes he teacheth openly, that the Gospel dependeth not of mans reason. For if reason by any meanes were able to knowe this doctrine of his own strenght, it had not bene called a secrete misterie from the beginning of the worlde. (The reason of the seconde proposition (furthermore that deliueraunce from sinne, from the curse of the lawe, and the wrath of God is declared in the Gospell many testimonies of the Propheteſ and of the Apostoleſ do teach vs. Daniel saith plati-ly that Christ ſhal take away ſinnes. Paule teacheth that the curse of the lawe is aboliſhed by Christ his coming. The fater crieth from heauen that he is pleased by his ſonne, (the confirmation) that this is true al godly men haue exþerience, hauing the testimonie of the holy ghost, by whomie they criſ Abba fater, which certaintly they would not do, vullesſe they did ſtedfastly beleue that ſinne is takēn away, the curse of the lawe aboliſhed, the wrath of God pacified, (the reason of þ third proposition) furthermore þ the remiſſion of ſinnes, ſaluation, & life euerlaſting, is proclaimed in the Gospel, theſe testimonieſ beare witness. The loerde himſelf ſaith, it is thus written, that repentaunce & remiſſion of ſinnes ought to be preached in his name, the ſame preaching beginning at Hierusalē. In the laſt of ſaint Marke ſaluation is promiſed to all beleuerers. Likeþyſe in the x. chap. to the Romains: Furthermore the loerde him ſelf doth promiſe euerlaſting life to al them that

that beleue in him. what nedeth many wōdes. The vntuersall scripture doth promise remission of sūnes, saluation & euerlasting life, to al people embrasing the Gospel. (the confirmation.) For it cannot be chosen, but þ the wrath of God, the curse of þ law, & sinne being taken away: saluatiō, righteousness, & life must needes bee obtained. But because these things happē not to al men. For Caine Iudas, Saule, & many others haue perished, & at this day a great part of the world (a grief to heare) do fal into euerlasting destruction. In the definitiō fourthly is added þ these benefites do happen to them þ beleue (the reason) for the lord saith plainly , be þ beleueth in me, shal not perishe, but haue euerlastiug life. (The confirmation) and lest any man shoule thinke that this doth depend vpō the condition of wōkes, Paule wryteth that a man is iustified by faith without wōkes, & with lōg disputatiōs cōfirmeth the same in his epistle both to þ Romans, & to þ Galatians. Moreouer in the fist place is added, that the force of the Gospel doth consiste in the sacrifice of Christe, (the reason) for so Paule sayth: by the redēption whiche is in Christe Jesus (The comprobatiō) for the word which Paule useth here is Apolytrosis, that is to saye, redemptio which is done when by death the price is payd. For Lytrosis properly is the price of redemption. Such a price Christe payd for vs whē he was made sinne for vs, that we may be made the righteousnes of God. In the sixt place, is added that God shold be preached for his goodness & mercy, (the reason) whiche thing the multitude of Angels do sufficiently prove, & conainte, singing this hymne to God, at our Lordes birth, Glorie be to God on hysg, & peace on the earth, & unto men good will. (The confirmation) for we ought to thinke that this thing done therfore y al me which do acknowledge this Christ, may learne by the exāple of the Angels, to preache y goodnes & mercy of God, especially when nature it selfe doth crye out & teache vs, y thankes ought to be geue for benefites, or good curſes. In y last place, is added y fruites which they ought to shew, who are delivered by y Gospel (y reason) which thing is confirmed by the testimonie of Paule, saying wee are created in Christe Iesus to good woorkes, in the whiche the Lorde woulde haue vs to walke (the Confirmatio) for how may these twoe two agre that we are deliuered from sinne, and yet fulfill the desires of sinne, when Paule affirmeth that the healthfull grace of God appeared to all men, that we denying vngodlynes and worldly lustes, shoulde live godlye, soberlye and righteously. &c.

Seinge therefore that wee haue shewed by strange reasons, that sinne, the curse of the Law, and the wrath of God is taken away by the Gospell, and that in they place doe succede Righteousnes, Saluation and life thorow Christe, whch whilst wee beleue in him, and that God would that wee shoulde preach his goodnes for this his benefits, & in all our life time be thanckfull: that followech which before we propounded that the Gospell is a doctrine reualed from God, wherein is shewed. &c. Now when our definition is after this maner handled, if there be any of a contrary opinion, they are to be confuted with the Methode of confutation, whch consisteth of proposition, sublation, the opposite, contrary, or proposition, and the solution. The proposition in this place is the promise of the sublation, sublation is the proposition of our aduersaries. The opposite proposition, is the promise of the solution.

tion. The solution is the confirmation of opposite proposition. But the matter shalbe made manifest by a briefe exāple. Neither am I ignoraunt that oure aduersaries che Papistes, do bable (this is the proposition of the confutation, sublation foloweth) that the Gospel is the new law of not reueging, of casting awaye of ryches or not swearinge etc. The opposite proposition foloweth, but howdaine a thing that is, may easly be declared (the solution followeth:) For that which they affirme is directlye against the sacrifice of Christ, yea and against þ wholē Scripture, which plainly sheweth that we obtaine the benefits of the Gospel by fayth.
What þ are not Paule his woordes manifest: If righteousness be by the law, Christ dyed in vaine: this confirmation of the opposite proposition is to be taken oute of the places of confirmation, that is to say, out of the places of Logicke, of which thing I wil speake in the compoud Methode of places.
But what generally both in confirmatiōs, and confutations is to be obserued, heare those þ are studious are to be admonished.
First therefore after that wych manifest & plaine arguments, thou hast confirmed the con-

contrary preposition in order, the arguments of our aduersaries are to be refelled, and if the master suffer it so to be, firsste of all the first kind is to be taken, and afterwards we must come to the speciall arguments: as in this presente cause. Firsst wee must confute this that the Gospell is a Law. Secondlye that it is not a law of forbidding of reueng, of castig away of riches, of not swearing &c. Furthermore this also both in the confirmation of our owne opinion, & in the confutation of the contrary part is diligently to be noted and marked, that thou preuent those thinges which eyther the wisedomie of the flesh or els the contrary part may obieccte against those thinges which thou sayest and confute them. This seemeth to be oftentimes vsed of Paule in his writings, as in this confutation layed before vs of þ opiniõ of þ Papistes, þ the Gospell is þ new Law: the flesh unthankful to God, frõ thence taketh weapons unto himselfe against the doctrine of works, & inferreth or eõcludeþ after this maner: If the Gospel doth deliuere vs wout our workes, wherfore shold wee worke well? This obiection is to be taken away by preuention, And after this maner the faſh

the faythfull preacher must haue a respecte what maye be sayd on the contrary parte.
But the preceptes of a large confutacion, & confirmacion, are to be handled afcерwards.

¶ Of Diuision and partition.

This member of the Methode maye be handled verye profitabile after this maner.
First if thou expounde thine owne diuision, or partition. Secondly if thou prouest.
Thirdly if thou confirme it. Fourthly if thou gather it againe togecher. Let this be þ example of diuision: wee haue heard what the Law is, it remayneth now that wee declare into how many parts it is deuided (for such a forme of transition is to be vsed, when we go from one thing to another.) The Lawe of God therefore is three folde, Morall, Ce-remoniall and Iudicall. This was the exposition (The reason) for all the Lawes of God eyther teacheth manners, or commendeth Ceremonies, or practiseth iudgements.
(The confirmation) for by these mans life is very well conserued and gouerned. For in a ciuil life there is neede of iudgements, in the publicke assemble of the Church Ceremonies

rimonies are necessary, and that religion of the minde towardes God, and godlines towardes men (in the spirituall kingdome of God) do consist in the preceptes of maners. It is most evident (the collection!) Therefor that is most sure which we have sayd, that the Lawe of God is threefold, Moral, Ceremoniall, and Iudicall. Especiallye since the true gouernment of lyfe consisteth of these three, whether thou consider the common life, or the Church or the spiritual kingdome of God. If these members of diuision be darcke and obscure, they are to be expounded by definitions, and subdiuisions, & are to be made manifeste by reasons and examples. But if the aduersary do obtrude or bringe in any other diuision that is false, it is to be ouerthowne by þ Methode of confutation. There needeth no examples in a manifest thing. Moreover partition, is to be framed after the same sorte. As the parts of repentaunce are, contrition, faith, and a desyre to leade a godly life: (the reaso) for it becometh vs to be sorry for our sinnes, and because the contrition is of no force vnlesse there be also fayth in Christe, this is of necessity required. And because neither of these

these is true, unlesse the desire to liue a good and godly life doth follow, a good purpose of necessite is ioyned wth the former (the comprobation) for wee see both the Scryptures and the examples do ioyne these thre together : David being fallen was sorpe þ he had sinned, he fled by fayth to mercy, and the rest of his life withall the endeour hee might be kept innocent. These members of particion if they be ioyned wþ definitions, deuisions and their reasons, a greate, profitable, and plentiful Dration wil ensue and arise thereof.

Now we must ad þ causes of a thing altogether after a naturall order, & must seclude or set a part those thgs whch seem to be the causes of a thinge, and yet are not.
To euerye kinde of cause their reasons are to be added out of the word of the Lorde.
Compounded causes do runne together in their actions, and doe stande with mutuall helpe, and euerye one hath a certaine proprietie in actions. Wherefore the orders of causes are diligentlye to bee considered, least there shoulde be a confusson of causes, from

from whence afterwardes great darcknes migh aryse. Furthermore this is also to be obserued, when any thing is commaunded or forbiden, al cooordinate causes are commaunded and forbidden. As whē the sanctification of the name of God is commaunded, which cannot be withoute Fayth, neyther without the knowledge of God, which knowledge of God cannot be withoute the preachinge of the worde of God. Therefore when wee are commaunded to praye for the santification of the name of God, wee aske and praye for these thinges in order, for the preaching of the word, for the knowledge of God, for Fayth, and for the sanctification it selfe of the name of God. Nowe I will briefflye shew an example hereof. The causes of repentaunce are not the free will of man (this is the seperation) but firste the worde of God, next the holy Ghost, who inwardly reprouech sinne, & stirreth vp a hatred of sinne in the harte of man, and last of all a will not resistinge the deuine motion, and the worde. The endes are the glorie of God , and the saluation of the penitente personne . These are compounde causes, and doe stande wytch mutuall helpe in their

they actions, and it easelpe appeareth that euerye of them hath a certaine propriety in they order to the effect . Moreouer, how these are to be declared by definitions, and confirmed by testimonies, maye by the former preceptes be vnderstandinged.

¶ Of the effect.

The effects are to be expounded, proued, confirmed and gathered to gether , and they whiche are attributed to a thing fally, are to be ouerthowne by the Methode of confutation. As if a man shoulde affirme þ contrition deserueth remission of sinnes, he is to be confuted after the same manner, as before I haue declared.

¶ Of the vse and abuse.

If the thing haue bene abused, firste the abuse muste be confuted by the Methode of confutation. Secondlye the true and righte use, muste be expounded proued and confirmed.

Contra

COntraryes haue no certayne place, neither in this Methode, nor in others, but are to be dispersed heare and there, for illustration and amplifications sake. For Rhetoricians do thincke that nothing maketh a thing so plaine and easye, as the consering of chinges which are contrary.

T Of the simple kinde of teaching called Sintheticall.

THe Sintheticall exposition is, when we begin with those thinges that go before the matter, and by little and little, by certaine steppes and degrees do put them together, and lay them on a heape, vntil al those thinges do seeme to be gathered, which are sufficient to discusse the nature of the thing: As if we shold intreat of that peace which we haue in God by fayth, these things may be expounded by the figure called Synthesis, that is to say, composition. First we must declare what the offence is. Secondlye the partes of the offence. Thirdlye the mediatour. Fourthlye the recompence and satisfaction of the insurpe and hurt. Fiftlye the reconciliacion. Sixtlye the couenant of reconciliation. Seuenchly the declaration, or publishing of peace. Eightly the fruites of peace. If these were proued one after another, confirmed and exemplified by testimonies and examples, there would spring and arise a large and plentifull Dration. On this wise Synthesis doth followe the order of nature, and findeþ out, expoundeth, proueth and confirmeth all those questions, þ naturally go before, and doth by contraries, examples, similitudes, and dissimilitudes, exemplifie them. Furthermore this also is to be obserued that large and plentifull definitions by this Methode are made and fram'd as before ye may see in the definition of the Gospell.

F con*

The Analyticall exposition is when we begin from the whole, or from the ende, and afterwards finde out the partes, & those thinges which are required to the ende by an order, cleane contrary to the former, as if we shoulde intreate of prayet in this Methode, wee must expounde what iuuocation is is (for a definition contayneth the reason of the whole) and what is the ende thereof: After that we must number and count chose thinges which appertaine to prayer, as though they were necessary members thereof, as are the affections of the minde, the causes, wherefore wee praye, who is to be prayed unto, by whom, and what wee must praye for. Which for memoryes sake, I am woulte to comprehend in this little Verle:

Affectus causa, quis per quem quidque petendum.

That is to saye: In prayer these thinges are chiefely to be obserued.

Affectiones, causes, who, by whom, and what is to be asked.

Last of al indifferent circumstances may be added: as the indifferent circumstaunces of prayer, are place, time, and gesture. If these trulpe were proued and made manifeste by the Scriptures, and by examples, a greate and profitable copie of Dzatio would grow thereof. Moreover, what so euer wee haue bythet to spoken in the simple treatise of thinges, or places, ought so to be vnderstāded, þ they ought al to be done according to the artificial maner of diuers Methodes, of simple questions. But because varietye

F 2 deligh-

delighteth them that are exercised, some tunes learned Preachers do not follow the lawes of this Methode exactely, but do call the hearers as it were to counsell, and to chuse thosse thinges of greate pleney, which they thinke most profitable for to be knowne of the presente hearers. And this reason of increasing of thinges, some do call the Me-thode of Prudence, which considereth the weight of thinges and the circumstaunces of the present hearers. As if a man woulde increate of the Lawe of God. Heare first he should behould the hearers, and then consider the waighe of the thinges, and then he should more easly reduce the treatise unto a fewe Chapters, easye to be vnderstoode & borne awaie. And firste perchaunce he should expound what the Law is: Secondlye whether any man may fulfil the Law of God: Thirdly what is the vse thereof whē no man fulfilleth it: Fourthly what maner of abrogation of the Lawe is to be vnder-stanted. The like maye bee done in other simple questions. And althoughe these thinges be so, yet shall the Methode of this art which I haue expounded, profite the new preachers which are not as yet practised,

that both to strengthen their memorie, and also bringe longe time and muche practised therin, that they may afterwards luckily folow both kindes. Philip Melanthon of most holye memorie, applyinge himselfe to the common capacitye of men in the explication of any simple matter, iudgeth that these fourre are to be propounded, declared, and amplified. The definition of the thing, the causes, the partes, and the duties.

The definition being drawne out of the conference of manye sayinges, and noble examples, dothe gather the whole matter as it were in one bundle, and propoundeth briesly the summe of the matter: the explication of causes doth fortifye the definitio, the rehersal of partes doth more distinctly set the nature of the thinge before our eyes. In the worde offices, the vse, the effectes, and the finall causes of the thinge are comprehended

Moreover this is also to be admonished y in handling of places, whether they be simple or compounde, if there be many places, wee muste diligentlye take heede that that place which naturally goeth before, do also go before in the treatise: And if we shoulde make an Oration of sinnne and grace, first

F 3 wee

wee shold speake of sinne before grace, but if the places be vterly seprated, it skilleth not in what order thou do expounde them, vnlesse perhappes in confirmation, the one do mynister helpe to the other, for then that is to be expounded in the first place, which being done the other must be holpen.

¶ Of the compound kinde of teachinge.

The Sermon whiche consisteth of the compound kind of teaching, or of compound places, is when certayne compound places, that is to say propositions, and general and particular sentences are handled, which thing althonghe it be properly done by the Methode of confirmation, and of confutation: yet most commonly it chaunceth that a mixt Methode is added, for if the partes of a proposition be obscure, and darke, resolution shall unsoulde them, and set downe the partes eche part by him selfe. Division shal expound the partes set downe. Compositio afterwards shall compounde them: and the Methode of confirmation & confutatio shal proue the compound, and shall confute that which stryuetb with it. As if the firſt peti-tio shold be propounded to be increased of halowed

(halowed be thy name) here of necessity, first resolution must be added, which might bnsould this simple proposition into two parts, into the name of God, & the word halowing. Secondly division would expresse both partes, one after another, with definitions & divisions'. Thirdly composition would compound the parts agayne. Now frō hence confirmation & confutation mighte be added in their due time. And this precept is alwayes to be folowed, when the parts of a proposition haue neede of an explication, otherwise not at al. Furthermore in parables, resolution is to be added y first thou maist put down the parts unsoulded, & thē apply y same by the cōparison of y thing, to the which the parable doth appertaine, & afterwards frame the lessons and exhortacions, as in the parable which is in y Gospell of the seede: there be five partes of that parable. The sower, y seede, the sowinge, the earth, and the fruite. To y sower, God: to the seede, the word: to y sowinge, the preacher of y word: to y earth, the hearers of the word: & to the fruit of the seede, the fruite of y word may be cōpared. These being once declared thou maist frame lessons & exhortacions as the lessons of this present parable are. The first þ great care of Almighty God in procuring oure saluation. For heare the Lord is compared to the diligent husband man. The seconde the dignity of the word. The third, the worthi-nes of the mynisterye. The fourth, that if þ word bring not fourth good fruit, it shalbe imputed to vs and the devill. Furthermore exhortations are to be drawen oute of the end of the parable, for the endes of this pre-sente parable are: That the Lord mighte styre vp þ bearers to the loue of the word: That he mighte repproue the negligent, and mighc comforte the obedient. But in this kinde of preachinge there is yet a greater force and wisedome of þ Preacher to be requyred. Wherfore to chende that in this part (which otherwyse is harde enoughe) I maye somewhat ayde and helpe the newe Preachers. I wyl intreate of two thinges in order. First I will shewe the Methode of finding out of places, & then I will declare a waye to handle them eloquently and pro-fitablie, in which two chapters this whole faculte seemeth to consist.

¶ Of the inuention or findinge out of common places.

Leſſ

Let any man should take that for a common place which is spoken at all aduertures, even as they are wont to do, who almost out of every worde do hunte out some thinge, little regardinge whether the same appertaine to the purpose or no, for that they only seeke this that they may seeme to be greate deuisors and no lesse skilfull crastes men of common places : Rules are necessary, within the limittes whereof, the minde of the Inquisitor maye be compyled. And although the matter be greater then that it may be accomplished in few preceptes, yet is it profitable for yonge beginniers to keepe certaine common Rules, which they may safely folow to theyr benefite whō they shal instruct. First of al therefore when any text is read, & understanded, the occasion, the briefe summe, & comprehensiō, and the ende, and the use of þ texte must be sought out, which thinge, how and in what order it oughte to be done, in the Logitiā his kinde of interpreting before is declared. Secondlye the partes, or the propositions of the text must be sought out. And last of al out of these according to the rules following, common places must be drawne, which

which seeme to conduce to the ende of that matter which we haue compounded.

The first Rule.

If the subiecte of the proposition be a singular bonde, or ende, in steede therof, put by degree and in order his superiours, that is to saye, the forme in the first place. Secondly þ kinde next. Thirldly if you so thincke good, the superior and higher kinde. And let these be compounded in order with the predicate of the proposition. Psal. 122. in the beginning this is the proposition: I rejoyce (sayth David) when it is sayd to mee, Let vs goe into the house of the Lord. First make a permutatio of the person, after this maner: David rejoyseth when it is sayde unto him, Let vs goe into the house of the Lord. Here according to the rule, first p[re]ue the name of a kinge. Secondlye of a magistrate. Lastlye of a man. This beinge done, ioyne these in order with the predicate after this maner: It is the dutie of kinges to rejoyce in that they haue subiectes which agree with them in Religion: It ought to be a comforste to all men to agree in the worshipping

Hipping of God. Behold how many general sentences, this first and childishe rule doth minister vnto vs, whereof the lasse is most common, and may be spread into many particular arguments: of þ certainty wherof we must iudge oute of þ rule followinge. The example being confirmed in þ subiect, the thing is confirmed in the kinde. Therefore when this facte is approued in David, the thing in the kinde ought not to be disallowed. And on the contraraye syde: the example in the subiect being reprooued, in matter is reprooued in the kinde. As for example: Ozias the king of Iuda taking an other man's office vpon him displeased God. Therfore kinges, yea all men which meddle with other mens matters do displease God: for it was þ office of the prieastes, not of kinges, to offer the incense of a sweete perfume.

If in steede of the predicate, superius bee by degree and in order substituted, as þ next foringes: & afterwards other, & other kindes, a plentifull inventio or finding out of places will ensue thereof. This rule certeinly most ofte is to be folowed in other things,

The Preacher, or

chinges, but alwayses in the Histoyres of Christe. As for example: Christe healeth þ Samaritan Leper calling vpon him. Because this Samaritane is an Ethnicke and a man afflicced. Gather thou from hence þ Christe will helpe the afflicted Etnickes, and all men which cal vpon him. And because out of the particular actes of Christ, his office generally is gathered, it is lawful to fraine a place after this maner. That it is the office of Christ, or of Messias, to helpe the miserable and afflicted callinge vpon him.

¶ The thirde Rule.

If in stede of the subiecte and predicaunce, thou substitute by order somes & kinds: plenty of common propositions will growe therof. As for example: Dauid committing adulterie was banished ought of his kingdome, Therefore kinges greeuously offend and generally all men which liue wickedlye, shall some times or other suffer due punishmente. The filchines of wicked men was drowned in an vniversall floud, Therefore wicked men at one time or other halbe punished.

The

¶ The fourth rule to make abstractes.

Sometimes it is profitable oute of the concretes, as the beleeuing woman of a Cananite (Mat.15.) in her necessite came to Christ, called vpon him, woulde suffer no repulse, but was more earnest, euen as also the ruler of the Synagogue who beleeuing, did also conuere his whole family vnto the Lord. From hence gather thou the proprieties of Fayth, that is to saye, that Fayth inflorseth a man, in necessity to come to Christ, to call vpon him for succour, and maketh him earnest to thende he maye obtaine it: & then he proueth the encrease and receyuethe it, and at length bringeth forth most acceptable fruictes vnto God. This rule hath his force oute of that place which is called Coniugata, that is to say, things ioyned together. But because those things, which I haue rehearsed concerninge Fayth, are the principall partes of fayth, I haue encluded them in two Verses after this maner.

Vera fides Christū petit, & rogat, instat, ab ipso, Impetrat, & crescit, fractificatq; simul,

In En-

In Englishe thus.

True fayth doth seeke for Christ, doth aske and maketh earnest suete: Obcaynes of him, and doth encrease and also bringes forth fruite.

Another example this is. The man is blessed that feareth the Lord. The common place is. True felicity consisteth in the feare of the Lord: the use of this rule is greate, not onely in inuenting of places, but also in defining of Concretes. For as Aristotle & Rodulphe do teache oute of the discription of Concretes, þ definitions of Abstracts are gathered. As for example: if thou wouldest define what godlines is, take first the Concrete in a notable example: As, godly Abraham did feare the Lord, and did worshippe him in true fayth and obedience: Therefore godlines is the feare of the Lord, fayth and obedience towardes him. By this waye Aristotle founde out the differences of many vertues, which they that are studeous in diuinitye, shal easly perceyue, not to be vn-profitable for them.

¶ The fift Rule.

Those thinges are diligently to be considered which goe before the matter propouned.

pounded, whiche are ioyned also w^t the same, and whiche of necessite do followe the same, and are to be included into common places, As Psal 2. Blessed are al they that put their trust in him. First here it followeth oute of the antecedents, þ without Christ none are blessed. For if they be then blessed whē they put theyr trust in Christ, without this confidence al men are miserable. This place also, by a contrary sence is cōcluded after this maner: all þ put their confidence in Christ are blessed. Therefore all that put not their confidence in him are not blessed. If they are not blessed, certainly they are miserable.
Weare thou seest how this place doth myniser occasiō to reason of the wretchednes of mankind. The second place is of things ad-ioyning, which is framed according to þ .4. rule to wit, þ true felicity & blessednes consti-tuteth in þ cōfidence whiche we haue in Christ.
The third place that the benefite is universal. For a general proposition is not restrained to any nation or men, but the benefit is offered unto al which refuse not to put their trust in him. The fourth place, that fayth in Christ is a meane, whereby men are mad^e the partakers of the benefites of Christ.

The

The fift place of the diuinity of Christ, doth follow out of this place: For if sayth is only to be reposèd in God, & bee is pronounced blessed that putteth his confidence in Christ, it followeth of necessite that Christe is true God.

¶ The sixt Rule.

The necessary consequence of causes and of effectes, is not to be neglected. For if the cause be set downe, þ effecte is supposed to be concluded: as in our Creede, whē we acknowledege God to be omnipotent, Faith from thence draweth forth a double effecte, þe one is that God doth bestowe his bene-fices vpon whom he wil, the other that bee hath power to defend them whom he hath taken into his custodye. But let vs adde a more famous exāple. In the Lords Supper, as oute of a consequence of causes & effects, particular sentences are to be gathered oute of a true meditation of the Sacrament: Therfore seeing that the Lords Supper is a Sacramente of our redemption by the death of Christ. First the celebrazation of the Supper, doth by little and litle put into oure mindes the thoughte of sinne:

For

For the Lorde died for sinne. Secondly, is admonished vs of the sacrifice accomlyshed for the redemption of mankynde from the lawe of sinne. Thirdly, the dignitie and excellencie of this sacrifice, doth minister vnto godly myndes, the thought, not onely of the greatness of the wrath of God in striking his sonne for our sinnes, and of the unspeakable mercie of God, receyuinge vs vnto his grace, for the sacrifice of his sonne: but also, of the loue of his sonne, makynge his intercession for vs, and takyng or deryuing his fathers wrath and displeasure vpon hymselfe. Fourthly, contrition springeth out of the thought of synne, and of the wrath of God. Faythe verely is styrred vp by the unspeakable mercie of God, and the loue of his sonne, payinge the pycce of redemption for vs. Fiftly, this fayth is confirmed and increased by the vse of the Sacramente so great a thing. Sixtly, faith being confirmed and augmented, doth beginne a godlye, honest, and iust lyfe, and loueth his neigbour, with whome hee hath the pycce of redempcion common. Beholde what doctrine and lessons, what plencie, howe godly a meditation of

tion of the holy supper, the consequence of causes and effectes doth minister vnto vs another example. Christe remitteth sinnes of his owne authoritie. Here the effecte doth declare the diuinitie of Christe. The theefe rebuketh his fellowe who was a blasphemer, and calleth vpon Christe, out of which effectes, the contrition, the faith & the newe life of the theefe is to be gathered.

¶ The seventh Rule.

Let the repugnaunce of a sayinge, or woerde, and the repugnaunce of a consequent bee sought out: from whence two kyndes of places doe arise. Let the saying be, he that doth teache any other Gosspell, is accursed. The repugnaunce of this saying is this: hee that teacheth the same Gosspell, is not accursed, the consequence of the saying is, that the Pope is accursed, because he teacheth an other Gosspell. The repugnaunce of this saying is ouerthowen. As the Pope is not the head of the churche, and we must not obey the Pope.

¶ The eight Rule.

It is

It is good sometimes by the contrary settife, to frame a place when the termes or boundes be equall, as for example. The iust man liueth by fayth, ergo, hee that is not iuste liueth not by faythe. Whereof it followeth that neither righeteousnes nor life, is of woorkes. For so Paule dothe gather it. Gal.3. That no man is iustified by the lawe in the sight of God it is euident, because it is written the iust man liueth by fayth. In like manner a forme by conterpositio doth some times minister places, as, euery one that is of God doth heare Gods woorde. Here the place by conterposition doth gather, that he whiche heareth not Gods woorde, is not of God. These be the p̄ncipal rules of iuention of places, whose fountaines are places of Logike, & rules of consequences, & there may be more added to them, but I thinke þ these are sufficient to newe beginning preachers, which if they wil bouchsafe to folow, they may both haue a ready way to seke out these common places, & also they may iudge well of those places which are obserued vp others. Furthermore, hereby they may also iudge what is þ cause, why diuers autores do not alwayes shew forth þ selfe same places.

The Preacher, or

The reason of the difference is as well the diuersitie of inuention , as also that other places, do more contente, or please our auctoritie. After that the godly preacher hath founde out places, he must enter into a multitude of swarme of places. To this he shall applie a threesfolde instrument. For first he shall diligently consider, whether the place founde out, may exprestly, woorde for woorde, be seene in anye place of the Scripture . Secondly , the place must bee examined by demonstration to an impossible thing, if it be not expressed in the woord of God. Thirdly, the place must be concluded with some sillogisme , and by a sillogisticall conversion , it must bee tried as it were with a touchestone . Let this be an example of a demonstration, to an impossible thing . The place to be proued is, that Christians may possesse that whiche is their owne , take the opposite of this place . No Christians may possesse that whiche is their owne . Nowe seke out the proposition whiche is manifestly true , whiche with the opposite sayinge, may be one of the premisses in the sillogisme as for example : all that doe gene Almes, ought to possesse their owne, of which twoo premisses

misses a mosse false conclusion doth followe to witte, that no Christian man shall giue almes. By the manifest falsenes of this the other of the premisses is to be ouerthowne, wherefore since þ Maior is manifestly true, it followeth that the Minor is false: from hence nowe is inferred the truthe of the place, propounded by the lawe of contradictions. Nowe let vs gather together that whiche we haue sayde. All that shoule geue almes; ought to possesse their owne. No Christians may possesse their owne: Ergo, no Christian shall geue almes. But the conclusion is false, ergo, one of the premisses: not the Maior, ergo the Minor, whch saith that: No Christians maye possesse their owne. Let this be the example of a sillogisticall conuerſion. The place, some hearing Gods worde are not godly. The sillogisme.
None that walke after the fleshe are godly, some hearing Gods worde walke after the fleshe: Ergo, some hearing Gods worde are not godly. conuerſe it after this manner. If none that walke after the fleshe are godly, and some that here the worde, walke after the fleshe: ergo, some that heare the worde are not godly. For al they that heare

G 3 the

the wo^rde are not godly. For all they that heare the wo^rde are godly, or els none that walke after the fleshe are godly. None that heare the wo^rde shall walke after the flesh, or els some men that heare the wo^rde, walke after the fleshe: certaynely some that walke after the flesh shalbe godlye: but none that do walke after the fleshe are god-lye, and some whiche heare the wo^rde walke after the fleshe. The conclusion therefore remayneth firme and sure \exists that some whiche heare the wo^rde are not godlye,

¶ Of the manner of handling of places inuented, both plentifully and profitably.

To the plentifull and profitable handling of places, foure chynges are chiefly requyzed, whereof the firste is, the diductions of questions, that is to saye, of the places inuented. (The seconde a plentiful confirmation. The thirde, the digression to another matter. (The laste is the arti-ficiall conclusion. I wylle increate of these ples.

¶ Of the diduction of questions.

HE we must speake not of the inuentions of Common places, whereof now we haue increased, but of þ diduction of cō-mon places inuented, that is to say, of multiplying them into manye questions or places. Therefore the place inuented is diduc-ted, either into simple places, or into compouide places: as for example. If the fift commaundement were layde before vs, to be exponnded. First here, thou shal secke the common place according to the precept of the fift rule after this manner. If fathers are to be honoured, parentes are superiors, ergo superiors are to be honoured. This common place in the handling of the fift commaundement, is the principall, & chiefly to be touched. But yet þ it may plen-tifullly be increased of, it shalbe expedient to diduct or reduce it into other places, eyther

¶ 4 simple,

Simple, which che very wordes them selues do geue: or compounde, which either do colise of them which are necessarely included in the wordes them selues, as the formes of particular sentences, are included in these kyndes: or generall sentences, and what tinges soever are necessarely ioyned with the matter: or els are taken out of them, which are annexed and ioyned to the condi-cion and state of the matter, as in this example layde before vs, are included two simple places, one of honour, the other of superiours. These are to be handled a sunder, by the simple kinde of teaching of thinges, after the same sorte, as I haue hadled before.
Secondly, out of the diuision of this generall sentence: superiours are to bee honoured, many particular sentences do arise, according to the contrary diuision, of the sub-iecte and predicate. The subiect may be de-uided into these formes that of superiours, some are priuate, which are either natural, as parentes: or els not naturall as schole-maisters, patrones, and housholders: some are publike, as the ciuill and ecclesiasticall magistrate, with their differences. Furthermore the p̄edicate (to be honoured) may be deut.

deuided into partes of honour, for he which honoureth an other, doth reuerence him, obey him, and is thankefull vnto him. So there are three partes, or differences of the predicate. From hence as out of a groue, we may gather particular sentences. As we must reuerence our parentes, we must obey our parentes, we must bee thankefull to our parentes, wee must reuerence oure maisters, wee must obey our maisters, wee must bee thankefull to oure maisters, wee must reuerence patrones, wee must obaye patrones, wee must bee thankefull to patrones. After the same manner particular sentences are to bee framed, out of the rest whiche I haue declared, from whence may ensue a moste great plentie of needefull questions. Duer and besides this, places oftentymes, are profitably taken out of thē whiche consist of the state and condition, as: if parentes, scholemaisters, patrones, are frowarde, or euerthwarte, harde, or cruell, whether then wee shoud shewe them any reuerence, obedience, or kyndnes: and to what ende? and so out of other conditiōs, questions, are multiplied. But this laste kynde of questions, whiche doth growe out of the condition may be handled very fitly by a figure called occupation. Beholde if thou wile busfolde these particular sentences, by resolution, and wilch handle them by diuisio, and confirme, and garnishe them with the methode of confirmation: not one sermone, but see manye as there are particular sentences, may be made, and framed. I confess that all common places, doe not shewe so great plentie of particular sentences, notwithstanding there is none so barraine, but at the least, it may minister some sentences, whiche ye may frame out of a commō place, by the same reasō whiche is declared, whiche thinge that thou maiest doe cunninglye, ic woulde muche profite thee if thou haddest skilfull knowledge in the doctrine of predictables, predicamentes, and propositions.
of the

¶ Of a plentious confirmation.

A Plentious confirmation consisteth in the kindes of proofes, in heapinge and in dilating of arguments, and in confutation of the contrary opinion of whiche we wil speake in order.

¶ Of the kindes of Proofs.

There is a threē fould kinde of prooſes in Divinity. The firſt and moſt ſafeſt kinde, is when prooſe is brought out of the euideſt and cleare propoſitions of the Scripture. As for example, Paſſages are to be honoured, because the 5. Comaundement, euidently and plainly commaundeth: Honour thy father and thy mother. In like caſe, Righteouſnes is of fayth & not of woſks, because the word of the Lord doth ſo pronouice. We hould that a man is iuſtifyed by fayth wout woſks. The ſecond kinde is reaſoning as oſtentimes as it is not pronouiced by plaine woordes, but is gathered by a ſtronge and vanouable conſequence. And this kinde is double, ſtreight and indirec|. The ſtreight is when that whiche is to be pronounced, is gaſhered plainly in the firſt concluſion, which kinde is borowed from þ place of inuenſio, of the kinde, of the forme, of the definition, of þ cauſes, of þ deſtinates, & of things, adſoyning. As if this queſ.ō were asked, whether ſcholemaſters are to be honoured: oue of þ kinde, or general, thou maieſt conclude well that all ſuperiours are to be honored, ergo ſcholemaſters alſo, but þ indirec kinde concludeth not simple, that whiche is set downe to be proved: but doth gather an in-conuenience out of the opposite or contrary, wherwith he ouerthoweth the Antecedent which being ouerthowen the truthe of the opposite immediatly floweth: as if superiours are not to be honoured, neither par ents are to be honoured, but this is false, ergo, p. also. Therefore it followeth superiours are to be honoured. The third kinde is; of lese reputation, when we laboure in the testimonies, & examples of thē, which seeme to haue flourished in þ church, which kinde is disp̄viued, if it be deprived of the former prooofes.

Let vs propounde an other exāple: And let the question bee whether Christe bee God.
This is first proved by a saying, or by þ first kind of prooofe. Soj thus is it spoke of Christ in the first of John, chap. 5. he is true God & life everlasting. Secondlye by reasoning, Christe hath done the woxkes pertaining to God of his own proper power, & the honour of God is attributed to Christe, ergo, he is God by the indirect waye: If Christe were only a creature, every one only were accursed, that would put their confidence in him: but nowe Gods woordē pronounceþ them blessed blessed whiche put their trust in him, ergo, he is no creature, but true God. Thirdly, þ reſimone of the church, as the crede of Athanasius, and the boþce of all the people, in ge-uing their consent, do testifie Christe to bee God. Furthermore this our distinction of proofer wāteth neither reason, nor exāple.

The reason is this, whatsoeuer is proued, or disproued in sacred thinges, it is needefull þ the same be done, either by testimony of the scripture, or of the churche. If it be done by the scripture, it shalbe either by the expelle woordes from whence the firſte kinde doth growe, or els intricately, or obscurely, & that either in þ generall, or in the particular sentence, from whence the ſecond kind of proofer is taken. But if any thing be proued by the teſtimonie of the churche, it shalbe the chrd kind of proofer. Hereof truly we haue an example of Paule, who in his writing as it is wel knowē, hath uſed this threefolde kinde of proofer. That righteouſnes is of faith: by ſaying or wordes he þoueth it when as hee ſaith: The iust man liueth by faith, by reaſoning thus: If righteouſnes be of woorkes, Christe died in vayne. From hence now that followeth whiche he propounded, that righteouſnes

righteousnes is of fayth. By example: Abraham beleueed God, and it was imprented to him for righteouſnes. Also we beleue in Christ, that wee may be iustified by fayth.
If these kindes be velered or spoken of at large, there wil aryse great plenty of profes, but yet a meane is to be kept, lest plenty come out of season, & so breede iothsomnes.

¶ Of the heaping of arguments.

Congeries, or Heape in this place is when in prouing the proposition or common place the Chapters of p̄incipall argu-mentes are added, and as it were gathered together into one bundell, as if this proposition were to be handled. No man is able of his owne strength to fulfil Gods Lawes, the Chapters which followe of the Argu-mentes, may by heape, be added after this maner: If the expeſce of all men doth proue this manifestly. This our wounded nature groaning doth acknowledge this, the vniversall Scripture cryeth oute of this.
To conclude the Sacrifice of the sonne of God, come after a most horriblie maner vpon the gibbet of the Crosse, doth proue vpon us.

to vs. After this maner, Cicero ioyneth to the proposition, a heape of Argumentes, whom in disposinge of Argumentes all the best learned men are wont to immitate and follow. Notwithstanding although Cicero sometimes beginneth frō the last Chapter, a dilatinge of Argumentes put in the Heape, wherunto he ioyneth first, and after goeth forwarde unto the lasse, which is the last in the treatise. Yet for the Deuine and the Preacher, it is the surest way to follow an order in the Heape put in the Explication.

¶ Of the Expolition or dilating of Argumentes.

E xpolution or dilatinge, is by the whiche an Argument propounded is confirmed and beautified. But a copious Expolition consisteth of a proposition, of a reason, of a shewing, the cause of the reason of Exponation, and of Conclusion. The Proposition is that, which setteth before oure eyes some Chapter of an Argument, as though it were the proposition of a confirmation.

The

The reason alloweth the proposition, and it ought to be such a one, as maye be the mōⁿo^r of a sillogisme. A Etiologia, doth shew the cause of the reason, and it is meete, that it be such a one as maye eyther be the major of a sillogisme, or els the proufe therof: So that a whole sillogisme is made of a proposition, of a reason, and of the cause of the Reason. After the cause of the reason, Explication shall followe, whiche is to be boorded of sencences, comparates, contraries, similitudes, examples. The laste shalbe the conclusion, which gathereth together the summe of the former, and concludeth the principall proposition. These are the preceptes of an explication, neyther doth that which I haue sayd, striue against the opinion or iudgemente of them whiche haue nombrēd seuen parts of an expolucion. For there is not onelyz one kinde of explication, but I haue chosen þ onely whiche I thought to be most meete for preachers, that are but new beginners. But to the ende the preceptes of an explication may be understanded. I wil put downe one example. . . I haue before propounded this common place: No man of his owne power or strengthe is able to fulfill fulfill the lawes of God. Furthermore to this place I haue added four Chapters of p̄roofe, by a heaping of arguments. Wherof the first was, that the experience of al men did proue that to be true. Let this Chapter be the proposition of an exposition after this maner. The expperience of all men conuinceth this, that no man is able to fulfill the Lawe of God. (the reason) For all men doe easely perceiue in themselves, howe farre they are from the perfecte and perpetuall obedience of the Lawe of God. (The reason of the cause) For they see that the Lawe of God is holye, and a rule of perfect life: and that they themselves are altogether wicked by nature, and also feeble, and weake (the exponation from þ sentence.) So that is true whereof the Prophet speakeþ, that all oure righteousness is as the cloth of a menstruous woman: which sentence how cold it consist, if the expperience of any wise man had proued the contrary. (the exponation from the comparasons) For euen as a tree whose roote is rotten, and infected with a poysoned sappe can never bring forth but poysoned fruite: so man whose harte is infected with the poyson of sinnes, cannot

Shewe a purz and perfecte obediencie to the law of God. (The exhortation from the examples) whiche did not holpe Abell confess this in his Sacrifice : trulye it is euē so: For God had never allowed the Sacrifice of Abell, vnlesse that holy man had knowē Christ to be him which was promised, that should iustifye all beleeuers, & vnderstoode his owne sinne: whereby hee knew himselfe to be hindred, that he coulde not fulfill the lawe of God. For if hee had thought himselfe able to fulfill the lawe, he could never haue sacrificed a right, that is to saye haue declared in his sacrifice , that the promised seede , shoulde be the fulfiller of the Lawe.
Hereunto Dauid also as a molle sufficiēte witnes may be added, who cryng vnto the Lord, confesseth openly, that no man is iustifyed in þ light of God . For hee complai-neth þ all haue erred, and are made unprofitable, &c. (The conclusion) Since therfore wee haue Dauid as a witnes: since wee acknowledge the poysone of sinne, since we be-hould the purtyn of the Law, and our owne uncleanness, who I praye you , (vnlesse hee weare a mad man) woulde denye this: that hee

hee telleth his owne weake nes, and simbollitye in rendringe obedience to the Lawe of G D D. In this example after a sorte yee maye see the vse of exposition: whiche if I had determined to haue handled at large, euerye parte beinge dilated and multipliyed, a whole Oration euē oute of the first Chapter of the prooste, woulde plentifullye haue proceeded. After the same order the other thre Chapterrs, which consiste in the heape of Argumentes, must bee handled. From hence Sudicis yonge men maye easelype iudge, that greate profyte commeth of this Exposition. Wherefore they shall take a mosse profitable woorke in hande, if they will busilye practise themselves in the handlinge of an Exposition. For from hence they shall obtaine suche a facultye and facilitye, that hereafter when they shall haue occasion, cyther to speake of weightye matters, or to preache the woorde of G D D, these preceptes of an Exposition shall come into theyz mindes, euē as it were vpon a sodaine.

¶ Of the confutation.

The Methode of confutation, whiche consisteth of proposition, of sublation, of an opposite proposition, and of the solution; is before declared and made manifest by examples: Wherefore in this place I will onely shew the hearers the place of a confutation. The proper place for a confutation is assigned immediately after the confirmation, which place notwithstanding he hath not alwayes. For so often as any other opinion besydes oure owne dothe occupye the mindes of the hearers, the Exordium or beginninge maye be taken from the confutation: whiche rule not onely Aristotle and Cicero, but also S. Paule followeth in his Epistle to the Romaynes, for there laboutringe to confirme this proposition: that righteousness is of Fayth. First hee confuteth the pretudices or foreindgementes of the Gentiles, and of the Jewes: Of the Gentiles whiche thoughte that they were iustifyed by the lawe of Nature. And of the Jewes who boasted that they were iustifyed by the Lawe giuen vnto them by

God,

God . Oute of this confutation of presudices S. Paule falleth into a proposition, which hee firste repeateth, and after ioy-neth to it a iust confirmation. My iudge-ment is that this example of S. Paule is to be folowed, so oftentimes as the hearers mynides are occupied with any other opinions then with ther owne.

¶ Of digression.

The preceptes of digression maye be reduced to five pointes, which are, Place, meane, matter, time, and the retourne frō the digression. As concerning the place, this is to be obserued that digression oughte to be added unto anye proposition that is proued . For that is a digression oute of season which is made when the matter is not as yet confirmed. Suche a meane is to bee added, which may not interrupt the memorye of learners, wþt troublesome tediousnes : For they teache unluckelye, whoe neglectinge the doctrine, and beinge vexed wþt some small iniurie, doe declaine, and spende whole houres agaynst some one or other , whom they thincke haue offended theri.

theym. The matter of digression appertayneth to exhortations, consolations, childinges, but not to euerye sorte. For such oughte the matter of Digression to bee, that of his owne accord, it maye seeme to flowe oute of the Doctrine, and not to bee fetched anye where els. For excepte the forme, and nature of Learninge, do offer the matter of digression, it can make nothinge to edification at all. This precepte is therefore moze diligentlye to be obserued, because ofteyn tymes they that are by-exercised offendre againste it, not withoute great iniurie of the woord of G D D, and varte of the hearers. In the fourth place I haue put downe Tyne, which of necessitye requireth a Digression, for when the hearers doe eyther abhorre the Doctrine, eyther are somewhat moze slouthfull, or els be faint harted, then are they to be chidden, prouoked, and comforted. The recourne from the Digression, oughte not to be violente, but the ende thercof oughte to bee applyed, that it maye bee ioyned with that parte of the Sencence, from whence the Digression was made, whiche canne be scarcelye broughte to passe, vnesse

lesse the force of the doctrine haue shewed the matter of the Digression: or some figure beinge added, it maye haue recourse to the doctrine.

As sone as blessed L V T H E R began to defende the doctrine of the Gospele againste the tyraunye of the Pope, there was neede of more sharper prickes, and therefore hee was more oftner occupied in Digressions, as maye appeare by his wri-tinges. But now (the doctrine is fortifyed and establisched, and a more peaceable estate restored to oure Churches) wee muste use these sharper prickes more sparinglye.
Furthermore because neyther the vocation is a like, neither the auctoritee of all men equall, newe Preachers wyll thincke it to be a parrce of modestye, seldomme to wander beyonde the marke. Notwithstandinge if any shal require examples of the Digestion of these preceptes, let him reade the Epistle to the Hebrewes, for that onelye wyll mynister a greate nomber of examples.

¶ Of Artificiall conclusion.

H 4 I haue

I haue tolde you before, what manner of conclusion, ought to be added in the explication of euerye argumente. In this place wee muste speake of the conclusion of any place or whole Sermon, where in these thinges are to be obserued. First the place explicated, is to be repeated in one proposition. Secondlye a short reconinge of Argumentes is to be ordayned, and especiallye of the chieffest Chapter. Thirdlye the illation, or inference maye followe in the which thre thinges maye bee toynd whch are to be finished in thre propositions: what the presente place teacheth, what it confuteth, and what it admonishest vs of. Fourthlye, al thinges are so to be disposed, that the passage maye be more easie into the place followinge, if manye are to be expounded: as for example, the place which I propouned aboue beinge declared; That no man of his owne power is able to fulfyl the Lawe of God, this conclusion were not unprofitable, (the repetition of the place) whoe nowe after this will chincke himselfe to be able of his owne power to fulfill the lawe of God (the enumeration of arguof argumentes) when as not onelye experience and nature do deny it, the scripture in every corner by manifest testimonies doth confute it: but also the sacrifice of the same doth teache a farre contrary thing (the Al-lation) wherefore this place teacheth vs all to acknowledge our weakenes and synne, confuteth the Iusticiaries, whiche do boaste of the righteousnes of the lawe, and admo-nisheth vs all, that confessing our sinnes & weakenes, wee shoulde flic vnto Chritte, (the transition) whome the Gosspell offereth vnto vs, whereof wee must speake ppesentlye.

¶ Of that kynde of Sermon whiche consisteth in exhortation called Parainetical kynde.

The first kynge of preaching being expos-ted after a sorte (whiche because it con-sisteth in teaching, I haue named, Didac-toral. Now followeth the other the pare-neticall kynge whiche therefore I will more briefly handle, for that very seldomme it is had alone, and by it selfe, for mooste commonly it is wont

is wonte to be myngled with the doctrinall kynde. The parenetical kynde is that wher-by we perswade or dissuade, wee comforte or rebuke the hearers. From hence sprin-geth a threesoule parenetricall Sermon, to witte perswasible, comfortable, and re-bukeable, of the whiche these thinges in order are to bee declared. First the disili-tion, next the inuention, and afterwardes the treatise, to whome I wyll ioyne mos-tynge examples, to the intence the pre-ceptes more easelye maye bee understanded.

¶ Of the perswasible Ser- mon.

The perswasible Sermon is, whereby wee perswade the hearers, either to doe, to suffer, or to forslake some thinge. The places of inuention in this kinde are these especially: the necessitie of the cause, of the commaundement, of the vocation, the priuate and publique commodite, the dignicie of the persone and the thinge. Examples olde, newe, Christian, Ethnicke: Also parables, and sentences, the proffes, confirmations, and exhortacions, of all these maye be sprin-ced here

eled here, and there, and as I haue sayde before in the Logicke Methode, the exhortations, consolations, and rebukes, must be myngled with the figure of digression. So here with the Methode of Confirmation, the pareneticall places oughte to bee confirmed. Moreover, in this treatise, sower thynges mete together, the occasion, the proposition, the confirmation, and the conclusion: The occasion reciteth the cause of the exhortation. The proposition must bee amplifid, and multiplied, and often-times with other wordes, and figures must be iterated. The confirmation is to be soughe for, out of the places nowe rehearsed, in whiche confirmation moreover, there are twoo thynges, to be considered, the degree or steeere, and the figure. The degree maketh vs by little and little, to ascende from ligheer, and lesser matters to weygheier thynges, and of more importaunce, and so to molte weygheier and greate matters. Otherwyse exhortation is of no effectuation, or pypce. The figure dothe not onely serue the affections, but also (yf I may so termē yt, maketh the oration more sharpe and wycyte, to the ende it may alcōge

altogether pearce into the myndes of the bearers, and so possesse the whole harte it selfe. Whereunto interrogation, subiection, exclamation, admiration, dubitation, hypostasis, dialogisme, Aitopoija, and others of the like sorte, whiche are named and expounded of Rhethoricians ought to be referred. The conclusion, which I haue made the fourth part of the treatise, hath no neede of newe preceptes, but is to be confirmed by the same meanes, whiche is aboue declared, notwithstanding to the ende that the vse of the preceptes, may be seene, I wil set down one example onely.

The example of the persuasible sermon.

The occasion, because I see many slacke & slowe to heare the worde of God (proposition) I haue determined brieslye to stirre you vp to the loue of the heauenlye woordes, whereby ye are compelled to the moxe diligent hearinge and kepinge of the doctrine brought unto vs from heauen. (the passion of the mynde) although it is to be lamented that mostall men be so unmindefull of their saluasaluation, that they haue neade of prickes, to the ende they may make spedethe ther, whether they ought to be caried with al violēce.

(The necessarie of the cause) for therfore such a slothfull heauines is rooted in our myndes because we do not consider, as wee ought to do, what is the necessarie of the heauenlye worde: can any man vnderstande the will of God without his woorde: verely if the wisdō of the worlde (as Paule truely affirmeth) is but foolishnes before God, it can not come to passe that wee shold knowe the wyll of God, vntil we haue vnderstoode, the foolishnes of the sleashe. (The necessarie of the commaundement) truely the commaundement of God the fater, doth seeme to slippe out of our myndes, whose woordes do sounde from heauen: This is my welbeloued sonne heare him. The sonne him selfe doth desire, that his woorde may be heard of them that are bis: My sheepe here my voyce: whereof ic followe: that those whiche do contempne the voyce of Christe, whiche he soundeth by his ministers, are not his sheape. The holy ghoste, by the voyce of the Prophetes, and of the Apostles, dothe invite and call vs to the lawe, and the testimoniis. Therfore who arte

arte thou whiche despisest the commaundement of the eternall fader? Who art thou that despisest the sonne whiche suffered for thee, calling thee to the hearing of his word? Who art thou that refusest the dominion & rule of the holy ghost? (the necessarie of the vocation) we are so forgetfull from whence, and wherto we are called: are we not by the worde brought out of the darkenes of Satthan into þ marueilous light of God? This worde hath called vs, this worde hath made vs Christians, but wee in the meane season being unmindefull of so gloriouſ a name, haue conteyned the misterie of saluation, (the profit) but and if this royall and noble vocation moueth vs not truely, the reason of our proper comoditie ought to moue vs: wherewithall we perceiue that euen þ very bruce beastes are couched. But who is able by any reason of man or of Aungels, to recite at the least but certen porcions of this comoditie, specially when Paule after Esay sayth, the eye of man hath not seene, neither the eare bath hearde, neyther bath it ascended into the batte of man what thynges God hath prepared for them whiche loue hym. Nayther yet is there any cause, why anye

anye man shoulde dxeame that hee loueth God, whiche doth not heare his woordes nor meditate it, neither compareth it to gether, that the miserie whiche lyeth hidde therein, may by little and little be of him the better understanded, for Christe the euerlastinge woorde of God, sayth: He that loueth me wil kepe my sayinges, and my father will loue him. To this loue of h[is] father, & of the sonne there are annexed greater good thinges, then whiche by mans capacite maye bee perceiuued. Although Paule hath comprehended the summe of them in these wordes: The Gospell is the power of God vnto sal-uation to all beleuers. O foolish man, O stony harte, that despylest, reieccst and treadest vnderfoote so great a saluation offered. That wee may prouide for the belly, What do we not? do we not learne artes? do wee not sayle vpon the seas? wee flye no froste, wee refuse no heate, wee slomber at no tyme, to the ende wee maye prouide for our miserable bellye. What these thynges are readye to peryshe, wee are moued, and in the meane season wee leauue our saluation.
So great is our madnes, so greate is our peruersnes, & wickednes, we poore miserable wret-

wretches are so muche infected , with the poyson of sathan, that we would with more willing mindes dye in our wickednes, then thing els to do, then wee heare the worde of the Lorde, and that with lesse reverence truly, then those thre halspeny seruantes which in times past did heare Esop reciting of his fables. Would to God this our negligence were not an evident signe of the punishment of our ingratitude. (The dignicie of the person & of þing) who woulde haue thought they shold be vnde full of their promise made in baptisme , for there they are consecrated to the bodie of Chryste, and are made aignions with him of heauenlye thinges: neither can we by any other meanes abyde that we are not made more wary by other mennes harmes. It is a wonderfull thinge that it sinketh not into our myndes, howe all the worlde perished in the floode, for the contempte of Godswoorde. We are not moued by the examples of the holye patri-arches, Abell, Seth, Enoch, Noe, Abraham,

¶ Of the consolatorie Sermons or whiche consisteth in comfort- forting.

The Consolatorie or comfortable sermon is, wherein the preacher, doth lifte vp the man afflicted, and stryving vnder the croffe, leasse being ouercome with impatience, he should be subdued, and ouercomme with so-rowe. These are especiallye the commune comfortable places. The firſte is the wyll of the heauenly fathet. The ſeconde, liveraunce. The fourth, the neceſſitie of the conformitie of Chrift, and his mebers.

The fifth, the commodicie whiche is man-ſtoule.

sould. For by the croſſe the presumption of a man's owne power, is ouerthowen, hipocrite is disclosed, confidence in the fleſhe is shaken of, obedience is confirmed, pacience is produed, contēmptē of the woſtde followeth, humilitie ensueth, errore paſte is corrected, euill to come is taken heede of before hande, faythe is exerciſed, hope is taughte to be reposed in oure God. Reade more concerning this matter in the places of Philip Melancthon. The treatise consisteth of occaſion, propositiōn, confirmation, and conclusion, euen as in the perſwasible kynde, to whiche it is lyke, mozeouer because it is profitable to knowe a certayne wāye of applying of comfortes, I wyll briefly declare the Methode of comforting.

The Methode of geuinge of comforte,

But leaſte consolation shoulde be applyed out of ſeaſon, or vnskylfully, wee wyll di-ſtinguiſhe. Firſte, betweenz priuate, and publique comfortes, and afterwarde deſcribe the iuste forme of them both. I call that a priuate conſolation, whiche happeneth to one alone oppresed with some griefe or crosse. I call that commone whiche in the tyng, either of persecution or of any plague sent from God, falleth upon the whole comgregation: But sarte, wee wyll encrease of the priuate, in whiche threaceninges are generallye to bee obserued: Firste, whos is that is to be lifted vp, with consolations: Secondlye, what it is that doth grieue him: Thydlye, a sicke application of the medicine to the present griefe. Hee that feeleth payne or griefe, eyther is godlye or vngod-lye: If hee bee godlye, straightwaye the comon inheritaunce of the sonnes of God being shewed, bee is to be lifted vp, to be comforted, and cherished with consolations, and that by the places aboue rehersed, and here with muche profitte the eight chapter to the Romaines, may be alledged. But if hee be vngodly, it is nedfull as in a greeuous disease, that a greater care bee applyed, for suche a one is not to bee lyfted vp streyghtwaye, but is so muche the more to bee caste downe, with the chundryng of the Lawe of God, and to bee beate downe with threacninges, vntyll hee acknowleudge his owne vngodlynes without hypocrisie, vntyll hee vnde understandeth whiche God to bee syg-geth by agaynst hym; vncyll hee crye wyth manalles, that hee is gyple manye wapes.

For hee that applyeth comforthe hym and hym to a wycked man, eyther sycke, or otherwyse oppresed with anye calamitee dothe applye a moste daungerous an vnseasona-ble; and a deadlye poysen. And doth much lyke to that Phisicion whiche healeth the wounde outwardlye, the matter of putri-faction remayning within, from whence afterwarde a greater wicked and deadly mischefe bursteth out. Wherfore as the skilfull Phisicion, the reh being put in often, draweth out the corrupte matter, whiche beynge drawen foorth, couereth the wounde ouer with a mollifyng playster: So the godlye preacher, shoulde firsste touche the byle of the wycked man, by the threatening of the law, that his disease beyng knownen, maye the moye easelye bee cured, for it is truelye sayde, that the firsste steppe to healthe, is to knowe the disease. The seconde thyng, which in consolations I haue sayde, shoulde be considered, is the thyng whiche causeth the grief, or þing which doth greue him, whiche I thinke needfull to bee examined,

I 4 for

for the righte application of the medicine, for hee is otherwyse to be listedyng; whiche by his owne faulke hath brought a mischiese vpon hym selfe. And he also, otherwyse, can whome by another mans faulke, evill happe peneheth: For if any man by his owne faulke hath brought a crosse vpon hym selfe, as in famie, pouertie, sickenes, deach, &c. The inedictio[n] or comforche is not to bee applied forthwith vntes: thou see the guiltye person earnestlye touched: with the feeling of his synnes, soz then this feeling of synnes, is to be confirmed with the word of God, and to be augmented; if neede shall require: Then we muste descende to consolations: but if hee bee either an hypocrite, or otherwyse wycked, so longe the curse of the Lawe, and the wrath of God are to bee set before his eyes, vntyll hee knowe the greuousnes of his synnes, and confesse the same to hym selfe: oute of the gryfe of hys mynde.
But if hee cannot bee broughte therunto by the Lawe of God, and threatenynges, a precious stone is not to bee caste before swyne: On the contrary parte: If the guyltie personz, shall bee broughte to the knowledg[e] of hym selfe, and bee couched with wch the true feeling of griefe; for his synne committed: then at length the arte of Phys-sickē is to be applyed, and these thre in order are to be expounded. First his fall, next the punishment, and lastly the ende of both:

The fall is to be taughte first to proceede of this, in that he did caste from him the feare of the Lorde: and that may be confirmed fit-lye and plentifullly out of the first Chapter of S. Paul to the Romaynes: Secondolye that nowe the deceites of the devill, the fil-thines of the fleshe, and the wantonnes of the worlde, myghte more easelye preuaile against him, being as it were unarmed. The fall beinge declared, and confirmed wch these causes. In the seconde place, wee must declare, that the punishment, is in no wise equal with the offence committed, but is a testimonye of two most contrarie thin-ges that is to saye of the wrathē of G D. D and also of his faterlye good will and cle-mencye: of the wrathē of God, if the guiltye person will not reperce, and not suffer himselfe to be corrected, with the scourge of God: Of his faterlye good will and cle-mencye, if hee being corrected, be made better by the punishment, and will flye to the haue a of repentaunce. After this in the churche place, the ende both of the falt, and al-lō, of the punishment, is to be declared: Of the falt to thend afterward he may be more circumspecte and warier. Of the punishimente in that by the singuler countell and purpose of God (when in the meane tyme hee sparceth manye wicked and mischewous men) hee is chastened, not to the ende he should perishe, but that he may haue a ready testimonye of his fatherly good will to wardes him. But because this will verye hardly perswade him that laboureth vnder the Crosse, witnessses and examples are to be broughte forth oute of Gods woरde, such testimonies verelie as these are: Paule the i. Epistle to the Corinthishias p II. Chapter saith, that we are chastened with aduersity of the Lord: least we should be damned with the world. See, the end of the Crosse is, least we should be damned, if so wittē being admonished by the Crosse we repentagaine. My sonne (sayth Salomon) do not refuse the correction of the Lord, neither be thou weary whē thou art reproued of him, for whom God loueth hee chasteneth, & yet embraceth him as p father doth his sonne.

Pro. 16.

The auctorite of þ. Epistle to the Hebrews þe 12. Chapter sayth that we are bastards and not sonnes, if wee be without discipline and correction: such like places are moste fitte, wherewith the minde of the guiltye person now beinge penitent, maye be lifted þp, that nowe he woulde suffer any kinde of punishment as one readye to obeye God: Let the examples be Manasses, Dauid, the Aicer of Moses, Kinge Uias, the people ledde into Captiuite, and manye others, whiche were punished for certayne sinnes, and after throughte repentaunce, haue re-loured home againe. The example of the cheefe, in comparison of others is famous, who hath set foorth a notable example of patience and fayth. He did not therfore compte hymselfe an abiecte because hee suffered soe shamefull a death for his wickednesse, but patientlye sustayned the de-serued punishment, by Faythe reposid in CHRIST E. After such like testimonies & examples, wherwith the iudgements of God are to be made knowne, in cōparing the manners of men in oure age, with the manners of the people in the olde time: For God is always like to himselfe: (whether thou

þou haſt respect to punishment or mercy ahe common places before mentioned may be added. But if that which greeueþ him doe come thorough an others mans faulþ, that order in applyinge of comforte is to be folowed, which is a common comfort I am aboute to declare, whereto we must speake at this time. That common comfort therefore may be rightly framed, þe seechinges are to be obserued. First from whence common calamicie procedeth. Secondly whiche be causes thercof. Thirdly the applyinge of the Comforþte according to the difference of the calamicie and of the causes. The calamicie is either sent frō God, or els broughe in by the enemyes of our Common weale.
If the calamicie be of God, as the plague, wante of foode and vittaille, droughte and tempestes, the causes are not to be soughte þor without us, but in our owne houses, and within our selues, for the sinnes of particu-lær men are the causes of common calamities, and oftentimes for one mans fault the whole common wealth is plagued: whereof Acham, Dauid, OEdipus, and manye oþ-thers are witness(es), who by their owne wickednes haue broughe in a common calamtie.

ype. Here it is no harde matter to applie a comfort, if wee will followe the examples of the holy Prophetes: for the examples of them do teache vs, what is to be done: for they are wont openly to rebuke wickednes, and that after thre sortes or kindes of wickednes, to witte: The forsaking of God, by-pocrisye, insurpe done to the neigbhoure and such like, as most chieflinge seeine to ahould amonge the people. Examples are extant heare and there in the writings of the Prophetes. Againe they are wont to call publickly together al the congregation to repentaunce, fastinge and prayer.
Certayne notable examples of these two thinges are of late yeares set forth, at the commaydement of our most noble King, by the mynisters of our Churches, not withoute greate profite and mitigation, of deserued punishmentes. Last of al the Prophetes were wont to admonishe them, who they perceyued to bee defiled with wickednes, more then others, leauing an example to our mynisters of the worde, that they should admonishe, rebuke and correct them privately) whom they perceiue, by they idolatry, vsurie, adulterye, tirannie, deceptes, les, couetousnes &c, to bring in a plague to whole comon wealth. Tyresias, althoough he were an Ethenische priest bid tall OEdip pus the tyraunce, (for whose mischelous deede, the Theban comon wealth was pun ished with the pestilence,) to painefull pe nance. And after this maner Esayc and Ieremye haue corrected and reprehendes the kinges of their time, and haue ascribed solemnit calamities vnto them. And the ministres of the word ought to knowe that this is not the least part of their function & duty, which if they neglect eyther for feare or fluggishnes, they shall suffer greevous punishments of God, as in the threacnings of Ezechiel is declared, and elsewher.

But if either priuate or publicke calamiteye doe come from men, it is either for Justice or not. If for Justice, wee muste then take the comfoore from the comonou condition of the sonnes of God in this wylde, & declare vs how great honout God repreth vs w thie, y bee hath marked vs wch a peculiare proper marke of his warfare and exercise.
Wherfore the Apostles being scourged do rejoyce for that they are counted worthy to suffer reproche for the name of Christ

For this kinde of croſſe is most proper vnto the faithfull, wherewith Christe wilbe glorified in vs, even as S. Peter teacheth in the fourth Chapter of his firſt Epiftle.

But if not for Iuſtice the common calamity be brought vs from men, then the cauſes are to be ſoughte oute in our ſelues, and as before I haue ſaid wheras I haue ſpoken of the Croſſe, or affliction ſent from God: the comforte is to be applied. Out of cheſe I thinke it iſ manifest by what waye & meane both priuate and publicke comforts are to be applied.

The Chidinge Sermon iſ that in the which the preacher chydeth eyther the loytinge or the offendinge, or the stubburne and disobediente hearer. The ende of this oughte to be the correction and the amendment of him which is rebuked. Here cheſe places are cheſely to be conſidered. The firſt, the filthines of the thinge committed. The ſeconde, thinges adioyninge or appertayninge as are an euill conſcience, the peril of reie-

of reiection, or to be a caste awaye, and the feare of God, his iudgement hanging ouer our head, and of the present and euerlasting paynes. The third a conference togeher of the dignitie of the person and of the filthines of the thing. The fourth, examples.
The fift he the kniting or ioyning together of the person, as Christe our heade and king the Churche which is the spiritual country our body whiche is dedicated to God; that is may be p[ro]teyle of God, hereminto the compa-weale the house the familie &c. maye be referred. When I recken these places, I doe not thincke that all are to be applyed in euery chiding; but now these, sometimies the other, euuen as the wisse Preacher shall see to be expedient. Let the example be taken out of the first Epistle to the Corinthians the 6. Chapter, where S. Paul rebuketh fornicatours. The Methode of a treatise is not unlike to the treatise of an exhortacion wherefore I thincke it not needefull to adde any example: especially, whē the places are so plaine, and it is knownen that all thinges are to be proued, allowed, and garnished by the Methode of confirmation. But here I thoughte it needefull to adde two thinges.

The first that the minde of him which is to be chidden, must bee mollisfyed to heare chidings paciently, which thing may very fikelye be done; if the mynister declare his dutye towarde the giltye person, and shewe the common necessity layed vpon him to do the same, least the chiding shoulde seeme to proceede of some nougtye affection: Sa. Paule did before hand mollify the mindes of the Corinthisians, before hee vsed souer and bitter chidings. The second that conditions of repentaunce may be mingled, least any being discouraged, with somewhat more rougher chidings, shoulde fall into desperation or wilfullye kill himselfe.

These are the things good audience which I haue thought needfull to be declared, to newe Preachers, and I truste(unlesse my opinion do soulye beguile mee) that yonge men shal not be a little holpen by declaring this Methode. For all the preceptes which are recited by me are taken out of the fountaines of Logitians and Rethoriciās, and are applied to the vse of the Preacher profitable boch to the exposition of the holy writers, and also to the makinge of sacred Sermons, wych the whch if yonge men will suffer themselves to be ruled, And then not to promise them an easer proceeding in deuine studis, and makinge of Sermons.

K will

But because it is not sufficiencie to haue in-uented sicly, or to haue ordered and disposid those chings which we are about to speake of wisely, unlesse blessed Memorie be also present. I will adde a few thinges of Mem-orie in steede of a conclusion to this Ma-thode: and that not after the maner of the olde fathers whoe did inuente Images and signes, which were as certaine notes and helypes of Memorie, (for this subtilye of witte, I willinglye leauē to them) but I will gather those thinges onelye, wherewith they ſ̄ are desirous to learne to make Sermons, ſhall perceiue themſelues to be much holpen.

¶ Of Memorie.

Let vs appointe two maner of wayes of helpinge the memorie, whereof the former is more artificiall, þ latter more rude, and rusticall: that which is more artificiall doth consist of two chinges, that is to witte, of order and nomber, for by these it is manifested

self that artes are both taughte and learned.
For as order placeth euery thinge in his proper place, & considereth the beginnings, proceedinges, and markes or ends: so doth number measure thinges together, & their partes and portions. Because therefore the Methode which I haue taughte, doth shewe an order of thinges and as it were nombrētē the partes, the best way of learning by hart is diligently to consider the same order in þ minde, for it cannot bee, that he which hath conningly framed an order of thinges, and hath obserued the least pointes of thinges & as it were numbered them, but that he may easely kepe the same in minde, and require the same againe of it, when and as often as he shall haue occasion to speake: whereby it maye seeme a foolishe thinge to prescriue a ny other way of learning by hart, especiall to those men which are taughte and exercised in the art of eloquent speakinge. Notwithstanding although these thinges in very deede be thus, yet art they not soorthwith perceiued of all men. Wherefore that these may be vnderstode more orderly, and maye be applied more nearer to the use of þ preacher, I will deuide this wholē reason of learning

Learning by hart which I haue said, to consiste of order and nomber, into foure members of preceptes. The first is that he understand the matter perfectly, and minding to preach, do kepe in minde a certayne brieke comprehension of the whole matter. The second member is, that he haue the places, that is to say κεφάλαια as the Greekes do terme it) by nomber. The third member is, that he make deuisions of the places, that are to be handled, which is needefull to be comprehended in a certayne nomber, which if it may be done by any Verse, fit for the same, it shall not be unprofitable: as if the vse of the lawe weare to be expounded. First hee mighte not unfitly make a thirde deuision, which hee mighte comprehend in this Verse.

Istruit, & damnat santes, docet atque natos.

In English thus.

It doth instruct, and eke condemne, all such as godly are:
And to enforme the newe boynē men, it hath as equall care.

And because the first part of this diuissio, comprehende them also in this verse:

Mandatum, p̄enæ, pax publica, dux ad Iesum.
The paynes and the commaundement, and also publike peace:

The guide and leader unto Christe.

The trewe meditation of the Law (Doctor Peter Palladius, oure moſte watchfull Bishop, very muche deseruing of the churches of the Danes, of Noruegia, and Iſelan-dia) hath comprehended in this verſe:

Lex quid eram, quid sum, quid ero, per quem manifestat.

In Englishe thus:

The Lawe doth make apparant what I was, and what I am:

What I ſhalbe it doth declare, andeke by whome it came.

The fourth meber is, that in certaine places digreſſions into threateninges, consolations, and exhortations be placed, leaste in making digreſſion to an other matter, the memory be hindered, and the preacher with-drawen from the matter propoſed, which commonly is wonte to happen, to thē which do not obſerue this precept. Nowe when as According to these fower preceptes, hee that

¶ A preache hath disposed his Oration, as it were recorded it. Hee must settle hym selfe to learne it accordinge to the order of his disygnsion. And firste of all, hee must commit to memorie the bytene, and summarie comprehension, for that is firste to bere-cised. Secondly, hee must learne the places, or the chapters a sonder. And thridlye the treatise or handling of the places with theiur diuisions and the parcels of them. I doubte not but this waye of learneinge by harte, is the best of all, whiche all learned men without doubt do followe. Furthermore, the latter reason whiche I sayde is more rude and rustical, is profitable to men unlearned, which haue not tasted of the arte of Rethorick. And this whether it be framed with notes of numbers, or with letters, it is all one, and se may be done in this maner. Firste, chose thinges whiche a preacher ignoraunt of artes will learne by harte, hee shall deuide with notes of number, or with every letter. Afterwarde in repeting, hee shall see what he bath sette downe at every note or letter. Last of all, hee shall learne by harte according to the distinctions whiche he hath made, and shall demaunde agayne of euery

of euery note or letter, as a chsng commissed to their custody that whiche before hee had committed vnto them. It will not a litle profite hym if firste hee wryte out his Sermone, and afterwarde according to the prescript rules do diuide, and learne it by hart. For the minde doth moze easelye retayne and kepe that whiche the bande before hath noted.
